Liens on realty. It is very generally considered that, even though a debt is secured by a mortgage or other lien on land, if it is a personal debt of decedent, it is to be paid primarily out of the personalty,[40] although the personalty cannot be applied to relieve land of a lien which does not involve any debt of decedent.[41]

Taxes or assessments on realty, if assessed or becoming due before decedent's death, are payable primarily from the personalty,[42] but those accruing subsequently are a charge on the land.[43]

[§ 1263] c. Rents of Realty. Rents of real estate accruing subsequent to the death of a decedent are regarded as realty rather than as personalty,[44] and hence are not primarily liable for the payment of debts;[45] but they may, like the realty itself, be made subject to decedent's debts where the personalty is insufficient,[46] and under appropriate circumstances it may be proper to apply the rents to the payment of debts instead of selling the realty itself for this purpose.[47] Where an administraor acquired title to certain property belonging to the estate, subject to certain liens, it was his duty as administrator to apply the rents accruing from the property of the estate on its debts.[48]

[§ 1264] d. Marshaling Assets.[49] Ordinarily proceedings to marshal assets of a decedent's estate

tor cannot make a valid agreement with a creditor of the estate that part of the claim shall be charged against the land. In re Jenkins, 3 Dem. Surr. (N. Y.) 551

[g] Where a will disposing of both realty and personalty was contested, the expenses of the contest and those of administration were chargeable against the personal estate, although, under a failure of the will to have disposed of it, one half of the personal estate would have passed to the next of kin. Matter of Ogden, 41 Misc. 158, 83 NYS 977, 4 Mills Surr. 1.

[h] A claim for expenses for having a will probated is not a liability against the real estate, except where the land has to be sold for payment of debts. Taylor v. Crook, 136 Ala. 354, 34 S 905, 96 AmSR 26.

[i] Taxes.—Where testator directed the payment of all his funeral expenses and debts out of his personal estate, the balance of which he gave to his wife, together with a life estate in certain land, the personal estate was liable for taxes assessed against the real and personal estate and unpaid at the time of testator's death, as taxes, while not "debts," strictly speaking, are obligations or liabilities. Penn v. Penn, 120 Ky. 557, 87 SW 306, 27 KyL 946.

[j] In a contest between the sureties on the general bond of an administrator and the sureties on a bond given on procuring an order for the sale of real estate, the sureties on the general bond are entitled to insist that payments of debts by the administrator shall first be credited to his liability before any part can be applied as credits to the fund arising from the sale of real estate, the personal estate being the primary fund for the payment of debts. Moore v. State, (Ind. A.) 84 NE 161.

[k] A judgment creditor whose judgment was obtained in decedent's lifetime "was not compelled to look to the real estate as merely a secondary fund for payment, but had the right to look upon the estate, real and personal, as equally liable." Suckley v. Rotchford, 12 Gratt. (53 Va.) 60, 68, 65 AmD 240.

are necessary only in case decedent died testate, in which case questions arise as to primary liability as between property disposed of and that undisposed of by the will, and also as between property which is the subject of a general gift and that which is specifically devised or bequeathed.[50] When such proceedings are had,[51] they are, with certain modifications necessarily resulting from the nature of the case, governed by practically the same rules as apply in the case of the ordinary proceedings for marshaling assets.[52]

[§ 1265] e. Effect of Testamentary Provisions. The general rules with respect to what property is available for the payment of debts are subject to the power of a testator to direct, by his will, what property shall be used, or shall constitute the primary fund, for this purpose, and when such testamentary directions are given they must be followed so far as this is possible without detriment to the rights of creditors.[53]

XI. DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE

[§ 1266] A. Authority and Duty to Make—1. In General. It is the right and duty of a personal representative, upon the settlement of his decedent's estate, and after payment of debts, to make distribution of decedent's property, in the manner directed by the will,[54] as in the payment of legacies;[55] or in case of intestacy, or as to property not disposed of by the will, in the manner prescribed by law,[56]

[a] Who entitled to demand marshaling.—Where a testatrix devised certain realty to her husband for life, with power to appoint the remainder, and also other realty to him in fee, and he granted and encumbered the devise in fee to such an extent that, if it was first sold to pay testatrix's debts, his grantees and encumbrancers would be damaged, they were entitled to a marshaling of the assets of the estate. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 32 Colo. 365, 76 P 799.

[b] Parties.—In suits to marshal the assets of a decedent, his legal representative or his creditors can alone maintain the action, and necessarily the heirs at law are the parties defendant. Still v. Wood, 85 S. C. 562, 67 SE 910.

[c] Complaint amounting to bill to marshal.—In an action by executors against devisees and legatees, a complaint alleging the insufficiency of the personal property to pay debts, the commencement of a suit by one creditor, and asking that creditors be called in to establish their claims, that the land be sold to aid in paying the debts, and that the balance, if any, be divided, was in effect a bill to marshal the estate, and a devisee and legatee might properly set up in her answer a debt due her from the testator. [a] Will disposing of real estate only.—The executor appointed in a will disposing of real estate only, leaving the personalty undisposed of, has the right to administer the personalty by paying the debts and distributing the balance among the next of kin entitled to it by law. In re Maccaffil, 57 Misc. 264, 107 NYS 1115, 6 Mills Surr. 293 [aff 127 App. Div. 21, 111 NYS 315].

[b] Personal property bequeathed to executors for a purpose which fails must be distributed by them upon an order of the court.[57] But it is no part of his duty to partition or convey among heirs or devisees the real estate of his decedent[58] or to pay legacies charged on the land,[59] unless he is empowered by the will to do so,[60] or unless the statute places real estate in the same situation as personal property with respect to passing to the personal representative.[61] The representative cannot be compelled to distribute or pay over intestate property until an order or decree of distribution has been made by the proper court,[62] but if there is a balance in his hands which is properly distributable, it is his duty to apply for an order of distribution within a reasonable time.[63] The power of making distribution cannot be delegated by the personal representatives to another.[64] Where a testatrix gave property in trust for a daughter, with remainder to her children, but there was no one to take the remainder so that the property was to be distributed as in case of intestacy, and part of the trust fund had been paid to the trustee, while part was still in the possession of the executor, and income from the fund was still unpaid and had to be separated from the principal, it was held that the whole fund should be placed in the hands of the trustee and be distributed by him instead of being distributed by the executor.[65]

A surviving executor has the duty of completing the distribution of the estate upon the death of his coexecutor.[66]

[§ 1267] 2. Termination of Authority. The termination of a representative's authority as such deprives him of all power of further distribution,[67] and it is his duty thereafter to turn over the funds

[c] The power of distribution is not barred by: (1) The filing by the distributees of a bill to prevent the execution of an order of sale. Harrison v. Harrison, 9 Ala. 470. (2) Failure of the administrator to make a sale of personal estate. Harrison v. Harrison, 9 Ala. 470. (3) Nor does an outstanding and undetermined claim of the widow to her share of the real estate prevent the administrator from paying to the children and distributees the sums respectively due them. Quarles v. Garrett, 4 S. C. Eq. 145.

[d] Administrator of absentee.—Where administration had been granted on the estate of a person who had been absent and had not been heard of for twenty-five years, the administrator could not be compelled to make distribution without positive proof of the death of the absentee, even though an auditor, whose report had been confirmed absolutely, had reported in favor of distribution. Beck's Est., 4 Pa. Dist. 222, 15 Pa. Co. 564.

[e] Same person administrator of two estates.—Where the same person is administrator of two connected estates, and has in his hands funds of one estate, the right of distribution of which could not be affected by the other, he will be required to distribute such funds without regard to the other estate. Breckenridge v. Floyd, 7 Dana (Ky.) 456.

[f] A personal representative cannot take the property at an appraised value and divide it arbitrarily among the heirs. Hampton's Case, 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 144.

[g] "If the parties make a division which they approve of, and the executor or administrator is willing to take the risk of having the property in his hands so divided, it is as valid as one made under the sanction of the statute. to his successor.[68]

[§ 1268] 3. Administrator Pendente Lite. An administrator pendente lite is an officer of the court and holds the property only until the suit terminates, and he is therefore under no obligation to distribute the assets of the estate;[69] but he will not be compelled to refund, where he has made distribution according to law.[70]

[§ 1269] 4. Distribution of Money Recovered on Representative's Bond. Money recovered by way of penalty on the bond of the executor or administrator must in some states be distributed by the judge of probate.[71] It must go to the heirs on whose share it has accrued.[72]

[§ 1270] 5. Security for Payment of Legacy, or Payment into Court. A court of equity may intervene at the instance of a pecuniary legatee to require security for the payment of a legacy in the future, whether vested or contingent,[73] where there is danger that the principal of the legacy will be wasted or lost;[74] or else to order the fund to be paid by the representative into court.[75]

[§ 1271] 6. Request for Directions.[76] The personal representative has the right to maintain a petition or bill at any time after his qualification[77] for directions from the court as to the application or distribution of funds of the estate which are in his hands, where he is in doubt as to how they should properly be distributed,[78] as where there is a dispute as to who is entitled to the same,[79] or there is reason to believe that a legacy made by the testator is invalid.[80] But where the division of a fund is not to be made until the expiration of a given term, the court will not undertake to instruct until such term has expired.[81] Nor will the court give instructions in advance as to the disposition of a balance after settlement of the estate, but will determine any questions arising with respect thereto when the accounts are allowed.[82]

[§ 1272] 7. Admission of, or Charging with, Assets. Where one receives money in his capacity as personal representative, he cannot withhold it from distribution on the ground that it is not a part of the estate,[83] and if he admits that he has sufficient assets in his hands to satisfy legatees or distributees, a judgment or decree may be rendered against him accordingly.[84] It has been held that, where the executors pay a judgment fixing them with assets, they cannot afterward recover the amount thus paid out of the estate of their testator, the judgment against them being personal.[85] After the entry of a decree charging the representative with sufficient assets to pay all legacies, the legatees are remitted entirely to the personal responsibility of the representative, and unless they seasonably assert their rights they stand in no better position than other creditors.[86] A statute which prevents an executor, who has neglected to enter a rule to limit creditors or to proceed thereon according to law, that is, take a decree to bar creditors and settle the estate, from pleading want of assets in abatement in a suit for a legacy, unless a suit brought within a year from the grant of probate is pending on a claim against the estate, will not permit a recovery of a legacy out of such personal representative beyond assets available for its payment.[87]

[g] A subsequent judgment creditor's rights are inferior to those of a distributee where the distribution is made without fraud. Justices Baker County Inferior Ct. v. Moreland, 20 Ga. 145.

[h] Where a testator makes a bequest in the form of a direction for the payment of notes made in favor of the beneficiary and payable after death, the amount of such notes cannot be allowed as claims against the estate, for the right of the beneficiary is based upon a bequest and not an indebtedness of the decedent.

or the beneficiaries under his will,[92] and notwithstanding the fact that the deficiency of assets has resulted from a devastavit of the personal representative.[93] It follows that the right of a legatee or distributee to his legacy or distributive share is suspended until all debts and liabilities of the estate have been satisfied,[94] or until the suspension is removed by the assent of the personal representative, where he is satisfied that the estate is solvent,[95] or by lapse of the time allowed for settlement of the estate.[96] And even though a legatee or distributee may compel satisfaction or distribution after the lapse of the statutory period for paying debts, the rights of legal creditors must be fully protected before such satisfaction or distribution will be ordered.[97]

[§ 1274] C. Assent to Legacy or Devise—1. In General. At law a legacy does not vest in the legatee, so as to be subject to his debts[98] or to be enforceable by him,[99] until it is assented to by the personal representative, at least until the lapse of the time allowed by law for settlement of the estate,[1] or until it may be seen with reasonable certainty that the legacy will not be needed to pay claims of a higher rank,[2] unless the legacy is charged on the land.[3] In equity, however, the executor is considered as a trustee and may be compelled to give his assent if he refuses it without just cause,[4] unless a condition precedent required of the legatee has not been complied with or non-

and a judgment for the claim would give it preference over bequests. In re Sexton, 162 Ill. A. 214, 222 [aff 253 Ill. 528, 97 NE 1061].

[i] Where minor heirs are creditors of the estate of the parent, they cannot on coming of age compete with other creditors before accounting for the movable property and revenues which came into their possession through their tutrix, and which, if consumed for their benefit, would extinguish the debt. Lemmon v. Clark, 36 La. Ann. 744.

[j] Although an executor is unable to plead want of assets in abatement, in a suit for the recovery of a legacy, when he has not taken a rule to limit creditors and proceeded thereon according to law, such neglect does not require payment of the legacy, and of the debt due, when there are not sufficient assets of the estate to pay both. O'Donnell v. McCann, 77 N. J. Eq. 188, 75 A 999.

93. Moncrief v. Moncrief, 73 Ind. 587, 591 ("If this allegation means that the plaintiff was guilty of a devastavit, still, as between the heir or devisee and the creditor, the loss must fall on the former, and not the latter. . . . The creditors of the estate might perhaps maintain an action for a devastavit against the executor and his sureties upon his bond; but they can not be driven to that remedy for the collection of their debts. Our attention has been called to the case of Pell v. Farquar, 3 Blackf. 331, in which it was said that, 'if an administrator consent to the sale, by heirs, of the real estate of the intestate, he divests himself of any right, which he might otherwise have had under the statute, to make such estate assets, in case of a deficiency of the personal property.' This proposition, we are satisfied, is founded in error, inasmuch as the consent of the administrator to the sale of the land, by the heir, could not divest the creditor, in the case supposed, of his right to have his debt made out of the land, and this right may be worked out by an order for the sale of the land made on the petition of the administrator as well as on the petition of the creditor. The case above cited, upon the point stated, must be overruled"). See also supra note 91.

[a] Presumption of consent.— Munsell v. Bartlett, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 20.

[b] That the time to present claims has not expired does not justify a refusal by executors having sufficient funds in their possession to make a payment on account of a legacy more than one year after their appointment, where they have been dilatory in publishing notice to creditors, unless they can point out with certainty the existence of claims which may be made against the estate, and which may impair the legatee's right. [e] Assent of coexecutor of donee.—Whorton v. Moragne, 62 Ala. 201.

Delivery of a specific legacy to the legatee is, of course, equivalent to an assent.[13]

Assent to part of legacy. An executor may assent to a part of a legacy without assenting to all, as where several different articles are bequeathed,[14] and an assent to a residuary bequest as regards a part of the residue is not an assent to the balance.[15]

Slight expressions or equivocal acts of the representative will not amount to an assent,[16] and it has been considered that where there is a deficiency of assets an assent should not be implied, but there must be an expressed assent because of the great prejudice which might otherwise result to the representative.[17]

It is a question of fact for the jury whether or not there has been an assent.[18]

[§ 1276] 3. Time for Assent. An executor may lawfully assent to a specific legacy before the debts of the estate are paid,[19] although such assent is void as to creditors.[20] Under the common-law rule that an executor acquires his authority entirely from the will,[21] he may assent to a legacy before probate of the will or his own qualification,[22] except where he is a nonresident,[23] or refuses or neglects to accept office.[24] But under the doctrine that an executor, like an administrator, derives his authority from the probate court he cannot assent until he has qualified according to law.[25]

[§ 1277] 4. Operation and Effect—a. In General. Assent to a legacy or devise, properly given, is usually irrevocable,[26] even though it may leave insufficient assets to pay debts[27] and operates to divest the representative of all title in or control over the property embraced in the legacy or devise assented to,[28] and to vest a complete legal title in

[a] An assent to a specific legacy is unexceptionable where the executor retains enough from the estate to pay the testator's debts. Nunn v. Owens, 33 S. C. L. 101.

[b] Legacy to executor.—"In case of deficiency of assets to pay the debts, the executor cannot prudently or properly give such assent, and the specific legacy is subject to application thereon in behalf of creditors. And as such was the situation of the estate in question, the appellant, as executor, could not by his assent divest himself of the property in that relation in behalf of himself individually. Spode v. Smith, 3 Russ. 511, 3 EngCh 511, 38 Reprint 667. And although by reason of the bequest to him he may not be chargeable with the income from the property, he must as executor account for the property as it came to him on the death of the testator and as of that time. It would seem to follow that, for the purposes of the administration of the estate, this property must be treated as part of the assets of the estate of the deceased, and, as such, subject to the jurisdiction of the probate court; and, consequently, the executor in respect to it is also subject to the order of that court." Matter of Pye, 18 App. Div. 306, 308, 46 NYS 350 [aff 154 N. Y. 773 mem, 49 NE 1103 mem].

[c] On the other hand it has been held that an executor may retract his assent if given (1) upon a reasonable ground for considering the assets sufficient for all demands, where they prove deficient in consequence of unknown debts unexpectedly claimed (Nelson v. Cornwell, 11 Gratt. (52 Va.) 724) (2) if the assent has not been completed by possession (Wheeler v. Lester, 1 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 293; Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 1 Ch. Cas. 256, 22 Reprint 788).

[a] Application of rule.—Where an executor has assented to a devise, and the ordinary without authority has granted thereafter an order of sale, the executor, having no right or title to the land, cannot recover it from the remainderman or a third party, whether the latter has good title or not. one estate alone,[35] or unless the executor has some trust or duty to perform after the expiration of the particular estate.[36] Conversely, an assent to a bequest in remainder has been held to imply an assent to the bequest of the preceding particular estate.[37]

[§ 1279] D. Executor or Administrator as Legatee or Distributee—1. Title, Rights, and Liabilities in General. When an executor is also legatee or distributee no formal act is necessary to vest title to the legacy or distributive share in him as an individual,[38] any act on his part showing an intention to retain assets in payment being sufficient.[39] But he cannot, without an order of court,[40] or a settlement or agreement with his colegatees or codistributees,[41] retain his legacy or share from the assets of the estate to the exclusion of or in preference to other legatees, distributees, or creditors,[42] as by applying it to debts due by him to the estate.[43] Nor can he transfer to himself, as legatee or distributee, property belonging to the estate before he has settled his administration account and paid the debts and prior legacies due from the estate,[44] his duty to dispose of the estate according to the will not being affected by the fact that, as a beneficiary, he claims the right to spend the principal.[45] Where, however, testator left personalty to his wife, who was also appointed executrix, to have the income for life, with "the right to use the principal if she would need it," she was entitled as executrix to pay to herself as legatee the personalty bequeathed to her, to invest the same and use the income and the principal if she needed it, the residuary legatees being only entitled to the remainder.[46] Where a surviving husband is his wife's administrator, it is immaterial in which capacity he settles for a distributable part of a personal estate to which his wife was entitled.[47]

Selection of investments in satisfaction of legacy or distributive share. Where an executor or administrator claims the right to pay himself his legacy or distributive share in advance of any distribution to him, and selects investments of the testator, he is not at liberty to take them at their appraised value unless this is more than the market value.[48]

Where executors have retained more than their share of the residuary estate, of which a part is given to them by the will, they are not jointly and severally liable to repay the excess, but each is liable for what he received for himself in excess of what he was actually entitled to, with interest on such amount.[49]

Where an administrator is indebted to the estate, the amount due him as heir should be a credit on the amount due from him as administrator,[50] but the rule permitting a set-off of a share of a distributee as against a debt owing by him to the estate will not be applied, so as to work immediately as of the time of decedent's death, if such application would operate to the detriment of the estate, and cannot be invoked to protect the administrator, who is a distributee, against his debt to the estate.[51] Where a wife has signed notes as surety for her husband, he cannot sell her real estate and pay the notes and then inherit as personal property the claim of the estate against him on the notes, but he must account to the heirs who would have inherited a portion of such real estate.[52] A decree upon final accounting, charging decedent's estate with his debt as administrator of his wife's estate and directing payment thereof to a daughter as sole heir of the wife, overlooking decedent's interest in his wife's property, is erroneous.[53]

Divesting of gift. Where testator devised all his property to his widow for life, or until remarriage, in which event her life estate was to terminate, and she was to receive absolutely a specified sum and the balance was to be equally divided between her and certain heirs, and she was appointed executrix and subsequently discharged after making a report that debts were paid, and thereafter she sold real estate belonging to testator, and subsequently remarried, it was held that after remarriage she held the amount received from the sale, not in an individual, but in a representative, capacity.[54]

[§ 1280] 2. Residuary or Sole Legatee Acting as Executor. An executor who is also residuary legatee acquires full title to the residuary assets only when all debts, charges, and legacies are paid [55] and he is judicially determined to be the sole or residuary legatee.[56] It has been held that this is true notwithstanding he has given the bond permitted by statute in such cases for the payment of debts and legacies,[57] but there is also authority for the view that he acquires title as an individual to the personal estate on his filing such bond.[58]

[§ 1281] E. Time for Distribution [59]—1. [§ 1282] 2. [f] Advancements necessary for support.—(1) A statute providing for an advancement by executors of part of legacies, when adjudged by the court to be "necessary for support," uses the word "necessary" in a relative sense, having references to the station in society of the beneficiary, her former mode of life, and the estate to which she has been accustomed and will ultimately be entitled. Lockwood v. Lockwood, 3 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 330. (2) An application by a married woman as legatee under a will for an advance payment on the legacy will be denied, where the moving papers do not show that petitioner's husband has not sufficient means to support and maintain her, and it does not appear that the income which she receives from the estate is insufficient to support her, and no fund out of which the advancement can be made is indefeasibly vested in her. Matter of Kohler, 91 Misc. 462, 154 NYS 958.

[g] Indebtedness of estate. — A statute authorizing partial distribution where "the estate is but little indebted" uses the words quoted relatively and as referring to a condition of things in which the debts are small as compared with the value of the estate, and not absolutely, so as to require the estate to be but little indebted regardless of its value. In re Crocker, 105 Cal. 368, 38 P 954 [foll In re Hinkle, 176 Cal. 563, 169 P 70].

[h] A surplus of "one-third" required by statute in order to authorize a surrogate to decree payment to a legatee or distributee prior to the regular time for distribution is to be estimated by excluding the amount of the petitioner's claim and payments already made. [c] A decree of partial distribution of real property is improper, where the court has ordered such property to be sold to pay debts and the expenses of administration, and the fact that such order is suspended by an appeal does not justify a distribution which would defeat the order of sale if it should be affirmed. [d] Proceedings to revoke probate.—Under a statute providing that after service on an executor or administrator with the will annexed of a citation to show cause why probate of the will should not be revoked, he must suspend acts that he has been expressly allowed to perform by order of the surrogate, the surrogate cannot order, after service of such citation, a portion of the estate to be divided among the legatees. [§ 1286] 6. Allowing Time for Conversion of Assets into Money. Where a will provides for the payment of pecuniary legacies out of the proceeds of a sale of property, a reasonable time will be allowed for the conversion of the assets into a fund for the payment of such legacies.[78]

[§ 1287] 7. Suspending or Withholding Distribution. Distribution may be suspended or withheld pending the determination of disputes affecting the distribution,[79] the determination of the right to and the amount of uncollected assets,[80] or the determination of a suit in which garnishment or other suitable process has been issued against the representative for a claim against the distributee,[81] even though a decree for payment has been rendered[82] or the money has been paid into court,[83] or where distribution cannot be immediately had without prejudice to the estate.[84] But an objection to distribution on the ground that litigation involving property of the estate is pending is not sustainable where it appears from the record that whatever litigation there has been concerning the estate has been finally determined.[85] Where the statute prescribes a time at which distribution "must" be made, distribution at such time cannot be denied because the time within which a minor or nonresident may contest the will has not expired.[86]

The necessity of retaining funds for a particular purpose furnishes no occasion or excuse for delaying the settlement of the balance of the estate, and the payment of the legacies which are due, there being sufficient funds for the payment of all legacies, whether due or not.[87]

Proof of necessity for keeping estate open. If a necessity exists for keeping the estate open beyond the time that ordinarily might be considered reasonable, this should be made to appear by the accounts, statements, and exhibits which it is the duty of the representative to make to the court which appointed him.[88]

Payment into court. Statutes sometimes provide a method by which, where distribution is postponed, the executor or administrator may pay the court the amount in his hands and thus relieve himself and his surety from all further liability in respect to the sum so paid in.[89]

[d] Effect of appeals from probate.—Where an order of the orphans' court, admitting a will to probate was suspended by appeals, the executor had one year from the day certified copies of the decrees of the appellate courts were filed with the surrogate and probate adjudged by him within which to pay the legacies. Smith v. Smith, 72 N. J. Eq. 777, 65 A 869.

[e] Claim of lost will.—Distribution will not be stayed because one of the next of kin testified on the trial of the caveat that he was informed and believed that the intestate left a valid will, although it cannot be found. Sterrett v. National Safe Deposit, etc., Co., 10 App. (D. C.) 131.

[f] The pendency of an action brought against decedent in his lifetime (1) may be ground for suspending distribution. Helb's Est., 16 Pa. Dist. 986. [h] Where one comes into an orphans' court with a claim which he should have prosecuted in a court of general equity jurisdiction, settlement and distribution of the estate should be suspended for only such time as is sufficient to permit him to file a bill and prosecute it with diligence to final hearing. In re Fulton, 200 Pa. 545, 50 A 187.

[i] Indebtedness to estate. — A legacy presently payable cannot be set off in equity against a debt of the legatee to the estate, not yet due. Hayes v. Hayes, 2 Del. Ch. 191, 73 AmD 709. But compare Sproul's App., 105 Pa. 442 (where a testator was a surety on an administration bond given by a legatee, the fact that such legatee was in default as administrator was a reason for withholding payment of the legacy until the contingent liability of the testator's estate for the legatee's default was discharged, although it was no reason for a refusal to allow interest to accrue upon such legacy).

[j] Possibility of foreign creditors.—A legatee to whom property situated in a foreign country is bequeathed cannot arrest distribution on the ground that there may be creditors in the foreign country, there being a presumtion to contrary. [b] Where collection is improbable, and there is a large amount of money on hand after paying all of decedent's debts, a final settlement and distribution should be made; and where there are infant distributees the unpaid claims should pass to their guardian, who can assert their rights thereto. tributees, the latter may commence proceedings to recover the amount to which they are entitled without waiting until the personal representative of such deceased executor or administrator has settled his account in the probate court,[90] although it is otherwise if he dies without settling such an account.[91] It has also been held that, where the executor or administrator has died, there can be no legal distribution until the appointment of a general administrator de bonis non.[92]

[§ 1289] F. Presumptions as to Distribution. After the lapse of a considerable period from the time within which a representative is required to settle his accounts, it will be presumed that they have been settled and the balance distributed,[93] and the representative cannot thereafter be compelled to make a distribution, unless he has made some admission or done some act to remove the bar created by the presumption,[94] or the presumption is overcome by other evidence.[95] There is no presumption that a check given to a third person for an amount equal to the executor's share as a legatee is in payment of the legacy.[96]

[§ 1290] G. Receipt or Release[97]—1. Right to Require. The personal representative may require a receipt or release as a condition precedent to the payment of the amount due on a legacy or distributive share,[98] but he cannot require the legatee or distributee to pay the costs of such release.[99]

Where a legacy is in the hands of the court, a receipt or release from the legatee is not necessary to authorize payment.[1]

[§ 1291] 2. Requisites to Validity—a. In General. In order that such acquittances may be valid as against the legatee or distributee, the latter must have had full knowledge of all the circumstances with respect to his rights in the distribution.[2] It is not essential to the validity of a receipt and release by beneficiaries under a will that the instrument describe real estate or mention the name of a grantee.[3] But in case of an allotment to a devisee or legatee, the receipt should be in substance

[b] Ignorance of a legacy by the legatee does not preclude the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of twenty years, as against a purchaser of land under the will, where the executor had ample personal assets to pay the legacy, and the purchaser did not know that the assets were not so applied. [b] Contrary view.—It is not necessary that a decree directing distribution before final settlement should require a refunding bond, as the law directs that a party shall not have the benefit of such decree until he has executed and delivered such bond. Mundy v. Calvert, 40 Miss. 181; French v. Davis, 38 Miss. 167.

he has taken refunding bonds from the legatees or distributees.[24] It has been held that a refunding bond is necessary even where there are sufficient assets to satisfy all demands against the estate,[25] but it has also been considered that such a bond may be dispensed with where there are circumstances within the knowledge of the court sufficient to justify it in so doing,[26] as for example where sufficient time has elapsed to raise a presumption that there are no outstanding debts.[27] The requirement of bonds of indemnity is sometimes limited to cases where distribution is made before the expiration of the time allowed for filing claims against the estate,[28] and after the lapse of the statutory period the representative may be compelled by an order of court to make distribution without a refunding bond,[29] if it appears that the debts which have been allowed have been paid or secured,[30] and there are no outstanding debts,[31] or the court is satisfied that no injury can result to the estate,[32] or if the decree reserves from distribution sufficient other property to pay all contested claims.[33]

Distribution of estate of absentee presumed dead. Provision is sometimes made by statute for a bond, upon the distribution of the estate of a person who has been absent and unheard of for so long a time as to raise a presumption of his death,[34] conditioned for a refunding of the amount received, with interest, in case the supposed decedent shall prove to be in fact alive.[35] But in a case where the supposed decedent had been absent and unheard from for forty years, his estate was distributed without requiring bond.[36]

Effect of testamentary provisions. Where the will directs the executor on the happening of certain contingencies to pay over legacies given subject to provisions for gifts to other persons, he may, on the death of such persons leaving no issue, pay over such legacies on the happening of the contingencies, without requiring the legatees to give security.[37]

But see Simpson's App., 109 Pa. 383 (a distributee to whom a balance in the hands of an administrator was awarded by the orphans' court, on the adjudication of an account filed within one year from the grant of letters of administration, is not entitled to payment of such award without giving a refunding bond).

[a] Reason for and discussion of rule.—"Distribution by the orphans' court of a balance shown by the account of an executor or administrator is a quasi proceeding in rem, binding upon the whole world, and especially binding those who are actually parties or, but for their own act or laches, might have been. The Act of April 13, 1840, P. L. 319 provides that distribution may be upon the application of any legatee, heir, or other person interested; and at the hearing, each legatee, heir, or creditor has the right to contest the claim of the others . . . and to deny his right to participate. The decree, like the decree of any other court, not only concludes all parties, but it cannot be impeached collaterally; and hence, where, in such proceeding, distribution is awarded to a legatee or distributee, or where the court approves a previous distribution, made voluntarily . . . Gormley's Est., 154 Pa. 378, 25 A 814, the executor or administrator has no right to demand a refunding bond, and, as a necessary consequence, cannot be made liable for not having done so. Creditors who do not choose to come into the orphans' court have the right to stay out. They may, if they prefer, sue in another forum; but if they do they lose all claim to the fund distributed, and cannot be heard to complain that the rights which they failed to assert were not protected or provided for. Hammett's App., 83 Pa. 392. Volenti non fit injuria. Of course, where the account is filed before the expiration of the time given to creditors to present their claims, its adjudication, within that period . . . will not protect the executor or administrator who does not require refunding bonds; and so as in Jones' App., 99 Pa. 124, where an account blending distribution and administration is simply confirmed without affirmative action by the court without regard to the distributive payments; in the former case, the award of distribution is in plain disregard of the right given to creditors by the act of assembly, and in the latter, creditors have not had the opportunity to be heard which is afforded where the account comes regularly before the court for distribution as well as confirmation." In re Piper, 208 Pa. 636, 638, 57 A 1118.

[b] Representative not entitled to require bond.—If an account has been filed by the representative a year from the grant of letters testamentary, an adjudication awarding distribution is after confirmation mandatory, and the representative cannot refuse compliance on the ground that no bond has been given. Pierson's Est., 5 Pa. Dist. 424; Moorehead's Est., 11 PittsbLegJNS (Pa.) 291; Lejee's Est., 5 Pa. Dist. 311.

[c] Bond not a prerequisite to action.—The giving of such a bond is not a prerequisite to the bringing of an action against the representative to recover a distributive share of the balance shown by such account. Baughman v. Kunkle, 8 Watts (Pa.) 483.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) It is not erroneous to decree an heir his share of a particular fund in the hands of an administrator without exacting a refunding bond, when the administrator shows by his answer no reason why it is improper, and it appears that the estate is solvent and that all the other heirs have received their share, and there is no allegation of outstanding indebtedness. Chambers v. Wright, 52 Ala. 444. (2) A refunding bond for the value of assets transferred by an executor under direction of court will not be required where a bond conditioned for the return of the assets in specie has already been given. 37. Fairmont Trust Co. v. Arnett, 74 W. Va. 127, 81 SE 733.

Where it has become impossible to give a bond, it may, it has been held, be dispensed with.[38]

An administrator improperly appointed cannot claim a refunding bond before he will be compelled to pay over to the persons rightfully entitled thereto assets of the intestate that may have come into his hands.[39]

[§ 1296] 2. From Whom Bond May Be Required —a. In General. A refunding bond may be required of a trustee [40] or guardian [41] of a distributee, the administrator of a deceased distributee,[42] the assignee of a legacy or distributive share,[43] or a creditor of a legatee or distributee seeking to subject the latter's legacy or distributive share in the hands of the representative to his own claim.[44] But it has been held that one entitled to receive a legacy under a distributive devise declaring a trust cannot be required to give a refunding bond;[45] and that where a legatee for life with remainder to his children disappeared more than seven years before the testator's death, he is presumed to be dead, and his child takes under the will and not through him, and where the absence, unheard from, has continued for twenty-one years, the corpus of the fund, and all accumulations, are properly awarded to the child without requiring a refunding bond.[46]

[§ 1297] b. Donee of Particular Estate. A legatee or devisee or tenant of a particular estate, with remainder over, is usually not required to give a refunding or forthcoming bond upon the delivery of the legacy or devise to him, for its delivery at the end of his particular estate,[47] unless there is an express statutory provision requiring it,[48] or unless there is danger of his wasting, secreting, or removing the property,[49] as where the legacy is one of money or stocks.[50]

[§ 1298] 3. Waiver of Right to Require Bond.[51] A representative may waive his right to require a refunding bond,[52] but his intention to waive his rights in this respect must be very clear.[53]

[§ 1299] 4. Amount of Bond. The penal amount of the refunding bond is usually within the discretion of the court[54] or representative.[55]

[§ 1300] 5. Approval of Bond. In order that such bonds may protect the representative, they must be approved by the probate court[56] at the time or after the final order to deliver the property is made.[57]

[§ 1301] 6. Effect of Giving Bond. Refunding bonds stand as to creditors in place of the assets distributed, and of the representative's responsibility, and operate to exonerate the representative from all liability for such assets and to protect him against the claims of creditors.[58] As to third persons it operates as an indemnity against claims against the estate,[59] and not against creditors of the legatees or distributees.[60] Recitals therein are subject to the ordinary rules of construction.[61] Where the executors of a contractor paid the profits of a contract to his nephew who claimed them on the ground that the contract had been performed by decedent for his benefit, taking a bond to secure the payment of any claims against the estate arising from the contract, the bond was sufficient to protect the estate with respect to a judgment for personal injuries caused in performing the contract, although that claim was not mentioned in the bond.[62]

[§ 1302] 7. Death of Distributee after Execution of Bond but before Payment. Where a distributee dies pending the proceedings for a distribution, payment may be made to his executor on a refunding bond executed by the distributee before his death.[63]

[§ 1303] 8. Effect of Failure to Require Bond in Order of Distribution. While the failure of the court to require a bond on ordering distribution may be erroneous,[64] it does not render the decree of distribution void;[65] and the failure of a decree in favor of the legatees against the executor to require a refunding bond has been held not even ground for reversal.[66]

[§ 1304] 9. Effect of Failure to Give Bond. The failure of the legatee or distributee to give or tender a refunding bond may be pleaded as a defense in an action for his legacy or distributive share[67] or it may constitute a ground for recovering the legacy or distributive share where this was delivered on condition that a bond be given.[68] So also if a refunding bond is not given when properly required, a sufficient part of the assets may be retained and set apart as security,[69] and it has been held that, where a legatee for life or years is properly required to give security and fails to do so, only the income of the legacy should be paid to him by the executor.[70] It is the duty of the representative upon such failure to invest the fund in the manner prescribed by statute[71] and not to pay it into court.[72] If the executor or administrator makes a voluntary payment to a legatee or distributee without taking a bond according to the statute, he is personally liable to creditors who may be prejudiced by the payment.[73] But it has been held that, where payment is made under an agreement with the legatees and distributees by which they are to protect the representative from loss, the for-

[§ 1305] I. Advances and Disbursements by Representative—1. In General. Advances and disbursements made by the representative for the benefit of legatees or distributees of the estate are to be reimbursed from their respective portions of the estate;[75] and they should be specially adjusted by the representative, aside from his ordinary administration accounts, by way of an offset to the amount due from the estate in his hands to the legatee or distributee,[76] or to the assignee of the legatee or distributee.[77]

If the legacy or distributive share lapses in interest after the advances have been made, the representative may recover the advances by an action in his own right as for money had and received.[78]

[§ 1306] 2. Advances Pursuant to Testamentary Directions. Where a will provided that testator's entire estate be kept together for five years and handled by his executors as if testator was living, and that his wife should have one-half interest in the residue, and that the executors should allow his wife funds from the estate during the progress of settlement to live as she had theretofore lived and to carry on certain charities, payments made to the wife by the executors during the settlement of the estate for her maintenance and the charities were chargeable to the estate, and not to her distributive share therein.[79]

[§ 1307] 3. Amount of Advances. The amount of advances to be made should be limited to the actual interest of the beneficiary of the estate at the time the advances are made.[80]

[b] Advances for maintenance and education of a minor child (1) should not exceed the interest on such child's distributive share. Tanner v. Davidson, 3 Bibb. (Ky.) 456. [c] The legal rate of interest on a trust fund is not a test of its income, for the purpose of computing the proportion of the legacy which may be advanced, since the actual income from such fund may be greater or less than the legal rate. Hoyt v. Jackson, 1 Dem. Surr. (N. Y.) 553.

[§ 1308] 4. Interest on Advances. Where the circumstances indicate that advances were made as a partial distribution, as where the representative had income in hand not bearing interest, no interest should be charged thereon against the legatee or distributee,[81] but where the representative is charged with interest on the funds in his hands, the advances should be treated as loans, and interest charged thereon, for the double purpose of reimbursing the representative for the interest which has been charged against him and of equalizing distributive shares.[82] It has also been held that interest on advances should be allowed the representative where he makes them before the legacy or distributive share is due.[83] If a note or other evidence of indebtedness is taken for the advance, it is merely a loan and should bear interest.[84]

[§ 1309] 5. Advances by Executor or Administrator Individually. An executor is not bound to pay out of his individual means after exhausting or nearly exhausting the funds applicable from the estate for advancement.[85] Where, however, the representative makes advances or disbursements from his own funds for the benefit of legatees or distributees, he becomes subrogated to their rights,[86] and is entitled to credit therefor, as a charge against their legacies or distributive shares, upon final settlement of the estate;[87] or after the legacy or distributive share is due he may reimburse himself from funds in his hands subject to its payment.[88] Where an executrix had no personalty in her hands, and the one source from which money could be obtained to pay a legacy was from payments to be made by a devisee, and the executrix could not enforce such payment, and the devisee made no payment, and whether he would make one was doubtful, and the executrix paid the legacy out of her own funds, and the legatee quitclaimed her rights in the estate with knowledge of the facts, the transaction was not within the rule that a transaction between an executrix and a beneficiary will be closely scrutinized.[89]

[§ 1310] 6. Lien for Advances. The representative's advances or disbursements on behalf of a legatee or distributee constitute a lien upon his share or interest in the estate,[90] but it cannot be enforced until the estate is ready for distribution.[91]

Patton, 121 Wis. 649, 99 NW 614.

[b] Counsel fees and expenses of suit, incurred by the representative in contesting or defending a will (1) may be deducted from the shares of persons interested therein. Miller v. Simpson, (Ky.) 2 SW 171; Kelly v. Davis, 37 Miss. 76. [§ 1312] J. Mode and Sufficiency of Payment or Distribution.[95]—1. In General. Unless a particular mode of paying a legatee or distributee is expressly prescribed by the will[96] or by statute,[97] payment may in general be made to him in any manner which gives him his due proportion of the estate,[98] and which shows an absolute payment.[99] Usually the payment should be made in money,[1] although with the consent of parties interested it may be made in other kinds of personalty.[2] A credit on a distributive share of the price of property should have no allowance for taxes paid on such legacy. Eliott v. Sparrell, 114 Mass. 404.

[a] Discretion of executors.—Where, in a division of an estate under the terms of a will, the executors were vested with certain discretion, and there were three methods possible, by one of which so large an amount of cash would be needed to equalize the shares as would exhaust the personalty, by another the least possible amount of cash would be required, and by a third a middle ground was possible, the adoption by the executors of the third method was not an abuse of discretion justifying the interference of the court. Clark v. Goodridge, 52 Misc. 239, 103 NYS 36.

[b] Method avoiding inequality should be adopted.—Where two equally convenient methods of distribution can be adopted by executors, but one would result in an unequal and inequitable distribution, while the other will result in an equal and equitable division, the latter method should be adopted. Wynkoop's Est., 53 Pa. Super. 472.

[c] Payment of taxes and expenses of repairs on the real property made by administrators on the order of the heir, who was one of the next of kin, is a payment to such person as one of the next of kin. Banks v. Taylor, 10 AbbPr (N. Y.) 199.

[a] An agreement by one authorized to receive a legacy for his principal with the executor to account to his principal for an indebtedness due by him, the agent, to the executor as so much of the legacy, without the principal's assent, is not a payment of the legacy by the executor. Benoist v. Poirer, 10 S. C. Eq. 217.

[b] Circumstances not showing payment.—On the issue whether a legacy had been paid to a legatee in a will bequeathing five hundred dollars to the legatee and providing that on her death childless the gift should go to a third person, it was shown that the will bequeathed three thousand three hundred dollars in pecuniary legacies, and devised realty, and provided for the distribution of the residue. An inventory and account of sales filed by the executors in 1861, the year of testator's death, showed thirteen thousand dollars, and the report of commissioners showed that in 1863 there was in the hands of executors fourteen thousand dollars due the legatees, and receipts from two other legatees in 1868, acknowledging receipt of a smaller amount than their legacies "in full," were shown. It was held that there was no evidence of payment of the five hundred dollars to the legatee sufficient to charge her estate, on her death in 1903 without leaving children, in favor of the third person. Outlaw v. Garner, 139 N. C. 190, 51 SE 925.

[a] A bequest of money (1) is payable in coin, and not in paper currency (Graveley v. Graveley, 25 S. C. 1, 60 AmR 478), (2) unless the latter payment is authorized by statute (Yates v. Salle, Wythe (Va.) 163).

[b] Where the assets consist partly of gold and partly of currency, each distributee should be decreed his share of each kind of money, distinguishing between them. Lowry v. Newsom, 51 Ala. 570.

[c] Bequest of amount to be invested by trustees.—Where testatrix bequeathed to trustees five thousand dollars in trust to be kept and invested according to their best judgment, the income to be paid to complainant society, the provision contemplated a permanent investment by the trustees, and hence they were entitled to payment of the legacy by the executors in cash, and not in securities belonging to the estate. Michigan Home Missionary Soc. v. Corning, 164 Mich. 395, 129 NW 686.

[d] Turning over note.—Where testator provided that each of his children should receive an equal part of his estate for life, with remainder to the children of such child, the portion of testator's daughter not to be subject to the debts, contracts, liabilities, or control of her husband, the turning over by the representatives of testator's estate to his daughter and her husband of the note of the insolvent husband is not a payment to her of the amount of the note, so as to make her estate liable to her children therefor. Mimms v. Lawrence, 91 SW 715, 28 KyL 1317.

[e] A husband's share in the personal property of his deceased wife remaining after the payment of debts and expenses of administration is in the absence of agreement or order of the court payable in money. Bartlett v. Hill, 69 N. H. 197, 45 A 144.

[f] A payment in depreciated currency (1) that is, Confederate money, has been held void (Thompson v. Perryman, 45 Ala. 619; Purdie v. Jones, 32 Gratt. (73 Va.) 827) (2) where the legacy was payable in good money (Stark v. Lipscomb, 29 Gratt. (70 Va.) 322). (3) But the representative has been allowed credit for the value of such currency paid by him at a time when it passed as lawful money (Williams v. Williams, 79 N. C. 411) (4) and he was required by the legatee to make payment (Evans v. Smith, 84 N. C. 146). (5) Where the representative received a fund in Confederate money and made payments to distributees out of what he thus received, it would be unjust to scale the amount received by him without applying the same scale to the payments made out of the fund. [a] The guardian of a minor heir is authorized to accept from the executor, as part of his ward's estate, a chose in action instead of cash. Stevens v. Meserve, 73 N. H. 293, 61 A 420, 111 AmSR 612.

[b] A debt to the succession not yet due is capable of partition among distributees. Le Blanc v. Bertant, 16 La. Ann. 294.

[c] Acceptance of property at agreed valuation.—A beneficiary under a will, having taken a piano at a valuation agreed upon with the other beneficiary, and having kept it for two years, is properly chargeable in the administrator's accounts with that amount. Muldrow v. Mixson, 89 S. C. 551, 72 SE 466.

[d] A contract with executors purchased by the distributee at the administrator's sale has been considered a valid payment.[3] A deposit in bank to a distributee's credit without notification thereof does not constitute a good payment,[4] nor is a distributive share paid merely by purchasing a bank draft for the amount thereof and sending it to the distributee, who proceeded with due diligence to collect it, where the bank failed in the meantime and the draft was not paid;[5] but the investment of money in the name of a legatee has been held a payment of the legacy, pro tanto, so as to vest the title in him and pass to him the right to the accruing interest.[6] Where the widow of a decedent, who was left with small children, continued to conduct the farm and business of her husband, and, after paying his debts, raised and educated her children, and during the lifetime of a son, who was dissolute, gave him money largely in excess of the amount to which he was legally or equitably entitled from the estate, which had not been divided, his widow, who was his only heir, was not entitled to require his mother, as administratrix of the estate, to account to her for his proportionate share of the income received after his death.[7]

Installment payments. Payment may sometimes be made by installments,[8] but a legatee is not bound to accept a partial payment of his legacy in the absence of an order of court directing such payment.[9]

Retention by representative as agent. The legatee may authorize the representative to retain the money as his debtor, in which case there is a valid distribution and the representative is liable only in his personal capacity.[10]

Where a bequest was made of the income of mining stock to certain persons for life, with remainder over to certain churches, the stock may be held by the executor until the distribution of the estate, he paying the dividends as directed by the will, or the court may appoint a trustee to hold it and collect and disburse the dividends during the lives of the life tenants, and after their death to deliver it to the remaindermen, or it may be turned over to the life tenants on their executing an approved bond to the remaindermen for the forthcoming of the property at the termination of the life estates.[11]

[§ 1313] 2. Distribution in Kind—a. In General. A distribution in kind is authorized where a conversion of the property into money is not necessary to the administration of the estate,[12] or demanded by the parties interested,[13] and the rights of the parties can be equitably adjusted.[14] Legawhereby a legatee receives property in severalty for relinquishment of his interest in the estate is not without consideration, although disproportion between values may be considered in passing on the bona fides of the transaction. Collier v. Collier, 137 Ga. 658, 74 SE 275, AnnCas1913A 1110.

[e] Payment, partly in cash and partly by note, is a sufficient payment, if received as such by the legatee, to give rise to a right of action on a bond of indemnity given to the executor. Van Middlesworth v. Van Middlesworth, 32 Mich. 183.

[f] Agreement beyond power of executor.—Where testator gave his property to his children equally, and appointed an executor, and provided that no court should take any further action over the estate than the probate of the will and the return and approval of an inventory, the executor had no authority to enter into an oral agreement with one of the children whereby the latter agreed to take certain personal property of an agreed value as his share in the testator's estate by virtue of the will. [a] Charging the sums paid to the legatees on a partial distribution of a decedent's estate against their legacies, instead of against their share in the residuary estate, is not objectionable as stopping the running of interest on the legacies to the disadvantage of such legatees, because the sum paid on such distribution to one entitled to share only in such residuary estate necessarily is charged against his share thereof. [a] Equality in distribution.—(1) The distributees must be equally dealt with in making distribution in kind. Lowry v. Newsom, 51 Ala. 570; Mercer v. Glass, 25 SW 114, 15 KyL 710; Williams v. Holmes, 9 Md. 281; Gillett v. Powell, 17 S. C. Eq. 142. (2) But an exactly equal distribution in kind need not be made. The shares of the distributees may be equalized by payments in money. Williams v. Holmes, 9 Md. 281. (3) If, on final settlement of the accounts, the assets are partly gold and partly currency, each distributee should have his fair share of each kind. Lowry v. Newsom, 51 Ala. 570.

[b] Fixing value of property by cies out of an estate over which testatrix had the power of appointment should be paid in kind.[15] In a case where the estate consisted almost entirely of wild prairie land, and the administrator was entitled to one third and four other heirs to one sixth each, it was held that it was the duty of the administrator to sell the land and distribute the proceeds, and he had no right, without the consent of the other next of kin, to distribute the estate by conveying to each of them an undivided one-sixth interest in the land.[16]

[§ 1314] b. Stocks, Bonds, Notes, and Other Securities. A payment or distribution in kind of stocks, bonds, notes, or other securities may be made[17] where the parties interested consent thereto,[18] and a sale is not necessary for purposes of administration,[19] or where it appears that a conversion of the securities into money would cause a loss,[20] or that the equities in the case justify such a distribution.[21]

Mode of transfer. Ordinarily a transfer of such securities in payment of the legacy or distributive share should be by proper indorsement or assignment,[22] although it has been held that a parol transfer is sufficient.[23]

The effect of such a distribution is to discharge the representative from liability for such assets and to give to the legatee or distributee who receives the securities the right to maintain or defend suits with respect thereto.[24] But where the representations made by the personal representative have induced legatees or distributees to accept corporate stock, they are not precluded from asking a money distribution when it subsequently appears that it is worthless.[25]

If investments made by the executor are disallowed, a legatee or distributee who has received the securities should return them upon receiving payment in money.[26]

[§ 1315] c. Specific Legacy. A specific legacy should be delivered in kind to the legatee entitled thereto,[27] unless such legacy is needed to satisfy agreement.—No rule of law precludes adult beneficiaries of the estate from agreeing as to the reasonable value of property distributed in kind in making a just division of the assets and for purposes of the settlement of the account of the personal representative. Williams v. Taylor, 81 Conn. 90, 70 A 643.

[b] Effect of prohibition in articles of association.—Payment of a legacy in shares of stock is not within a provision in the articles of the association, prohibiting a member from selling and transferring his shares without first offering the same for sale to the association, or, if it declines the option, to a member thereof. Lane v. Albertson, 78 App. Div. 607, 79 NYS 947.

debts,[28] or unless the will provides for its investment and the delivery of the proceeds by way of income to the legatee.[29] Where a note is bequeathed in equal shares to two persons who refuse to take it jointly, the executor may effect distribution by taking two new notes, each for one half of the amount, payable to each of the legatees.[30] Where an executor holds certificates of stock which, under a will, are bequeathed to a person to go to another if he dies "without leaving a family," and where in a suit for an accounting it is decreed that the executor shall turn over to the legatee the property bequeathed, to be held under the will, the executor has a right, before surrendering the certificate, to indorse thereon memoranda to the effect that they are held by the legatee under the terms of the will.[31] Where the property is situated in a foreign country, the executor is not bound to transport it to testator's domicile.[32]

[d] Discretion of executor.—Where a testatrix bequeathed to each legatee one or more bonds "of the face value of $1,000," and a few bonds were appraised at more than face value, while the others were appraised at less than face value, the matter of the distribution was discretionary with the executor; and in the absence of an abuse of such discretion a legatee receiving bonds appraised at less than face value had no ground of complaint. "The doctrine is founded upon principle as well as upon authority. It is, in fact, the collection of a debt due the estate. Personal estate is assets in the hands of the administrator. He is required by law to convert personal property into money; to collect all debts due the estate of the legatee or distributee,[35] or a person otherwise succeeding to his interest,[36] and also against a representative who is a legatee or distributee.[37] The application of the rule is not dependent upon the insolvency of the person beneficially entitled,[38] or affected by such insolvency,[39] or by the circumstance that the debt was not created until after the death of decedent.[40] from all debtors, including heirs. The heir has no title or claim to personal estate except a distributive share in the surplus after payment of debts and expenses of administration." Marvin v. Bowlby, 142 Mich. 245, 255, 105 NW 751, 113 AmSR 574, 4 LRANS 189, 7 AnnCas 559.

"An administrator or executor has the right and it is his duty, in the due administration of his trust, to retain out of the distributive share of an heir or legatee, and to hold and set off against the claim of a creditor indebted to the estate, an amount, if so much there be, as shall equal the indebtedness of such heir, legatee or creditor to the estate." Lambright v. Lambright, 74 Oh. St. 198, 205, 78 NE 265, 6 AnnCas 807.

[d] A surety on a bond given by a distributee to the estate may in equity compel the administrator to apply the distributee's share toward the satisfaction of the bond. Allen v. Smitherton, 41 N. C. 341.

[e] Disputed claims of the estate against a legatee are not the subject of retainer. West v. Smith, 8 How. (U. S.) 402, 12 L. ed. 1130 (a claim for the rent of land formerly owned by the testator could not be set off against a legacy, where the legatee was in possession of the land under an adverse claim of title, and no facts were shown on which the rents would be directly recoverable at law).

[g] Foreign attachment cannot be maintained against an administrator, as trustee, by a distributee who owes him debts exceeding the amount of his distributive share, even if before contracting such debts he executed to the administrator an assignment of such share in fraud of creditors. Nickerson v. Chase, 122 Mass. 296; Henshaw v. Whitney, 11 Gray (Mass.) 223.

Ann. 653; Haage's App., 17 Pa. 181; Tiernan's Est., 14 PittsbLegJNS (Pa.) 185. (2) It may be set up by cross bill, before final distribution, that the distributive share should not be paid on the ground that the husband's marital rights had attached and that he was indebted to the estate in a greater sum than such share. Crutchfield v. Patten, 44 Ga. 65.

[l] The question of the obligation of heirs to collate money paid to them by consent of coheirs prior to the appointment of the executor may be left by the executor to the heirs for settlement. Pon's Succ., 142 La. 721, 77 S 515, AnnCas1918D 939.

[m] The probate court has authority to determine the amount due from a distributee of an estate in course of administration, and to authorize the executors to deduct the amount of such indebtedness from the share of such distributee. "This right and duty exists whether the heir, legatee or creditor was indebted to decedent at the time of his death or contracted a liability

Such a retainer is not a set-off, although it is sometimes termed such, but is an exercise of the right of the representative to apply the funds in his hand to the payment of a debt due from the distributee to the estate.[41]

Interest. The right of retainer applies to both principal and interest,[42] but it is usually considered that interest should not be charged for the time after decedent's death unless the representative is charged with interest in his final settlement.[43]

Realty or proceeds thereof. It has been asserted that the right to retain for indebtedness exists even though the fund to be distribtued arose from the sale of real estate of decedent;[44] but it has also been held that, where an heir is indebted to the estate of his ancestor, neither the heir's distributive share of the real estate of such ancestor nor the proceeds of a sale thereof in the hands of the administrator is chargeable with such indebtedness, but the debt must be collected in the same manner as other debts due the estate.[45]

[§ 1318] b. Debt Due to Executor or Administrator Individually. In some jurisdictions a debt due to the personal representative individually by a legatee or distributee may be set off against his legacy or distributive share on a distribution of the estate to the beneficiaries,[46] but in other jurisdic-

to the estate thereafter, in either event the right of the heir or legatee to participate in the distribution of the estate, or of the creditor to be paid his claim, is subject and subordinate to the debt of such distributee or creditor to the estate, and the latter, in so far as there are assets in the hands of the administrator applicable thereto, must first be paid and satisfied." Lambright v. Lambright, supra.

[a] There may be a retainer where the legatee or distributee: (1) Borrows money of the estate from the executor or administrator. New v. New, 127 Ind. 576, 27 NE 154; Haskell v. Hill, 169 Mass. 124, 47 NE 586. (2) Buys property of the estate at a sale thereof by the executor or administrator. McGee v. Ford, 13 Miss. 769; Mahon v. Bower, 2 Miss. 275. (3) So also a debt due the representative through the satisfaction by him of the liability of decedent as surety for the distributee is subject to retainer. Hopkins v. Thompson, 73 Mo. A. 401; Ramson v. Thompson, 65 N. C. 628.

[b] Marital liability of husband.—A married man being liable at common law for the funeral expenses and physician's bill of his wife, the amount of such indebtedness may be retained out of his share in her estate. Brand v. Brand, 109 Ky. 721, 60 SW 704, 22 KyL 1366.

"It is not the technical right of set-off in actions at law. It is rather called in the old cases the right of retainer. It is an equitable right of its own nature, and not at all dependent upon any statute." Webb v. Fuller, 85 Me. 443, 445, 27 A 346, 22 LRA 177.

"This right is not one of set-off, but is founded on the principle that the administrator or executor has an equitable lien on the share of the distributee or legatee, until the latter has discharged the obligation which he owes to the estate." Holmes v. McPheeters, 149 Ind. 587, 590, 49 NE 452.

"It matters not by what name the proceeding is called, whether retainer, advancement, set-off, or assets in the hands of the legatee; the practical result is the same, and it rests upon wholesome principles of right and justice which can be administered in probate courts without the aid of a court of conscience." [a] Priority of right.—(1) The personal representative is entitled to retain the share of an heir or distributee in such moneys in payment of a debt which the latter owes to the estate as against the claim of a judgment creditor of such heir or distributee. Nelson v. Murfee, 69 Ala. 598. (2) He has a right to subject lands of his intestate to the payment of a debt due by the heir to the estate in preference to the claims of a purchaser from the heir and also to the lien of a creditor of the heir attaching to the land on the death of the ancestor. Streety v. McCurdy, 104 Ala. 493, 16 S 686.

[b] Equalization of shares of legatees or distributees. — (1) Where some of the legatees or distributees have been voluntarily overpaid their shares, or are otherwise indebted to the estate, the right of retainer out of the proceeds of a sale of the real estate may be exercised if necessary to secure equalization of their shares. Tobias v. Richardson, 26 Oh. Cir. Ct. 81; Githens' Est., 10 Pa. Dist. 375; Wittmann's Est., 9 Pa. Dist. 47. Contra Cockrill v. Lindon, 43 SW 451, 19 KyL 1379. (2) In equalizing distribution on account of overpayments made to a legatee the fact that the only fund out of which the excess can be retained is the proceeds of real estate is of no consequence. A devisee who takes real or personal property in contravention of a will, and so disappoints another devisee, shall have nothing under the will until compensation is made to the disappointed devisee. Landmesser's Est., 13 Pa. Super. 467.

[c] Devisee of specific realty. — The indebtedness of a devisee of specific realty is not, without judgment and levy by the executor, a charge upon or set-off against the realty so specifically devised. Woodruff v. Snowden, 10 OhS&CP 123, 7 OhNP 520.

S. C.—Sartor v. Beaty, 25 S. C. 293. "The title to the real estate vests in the heir at the date of the death of the ancestor. Real estate is not assets in the hands of a personal representative, and, unless otherwise charged by the terms of a will, is subject only to the contingency of a sale of so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the debts of the estate in case there is not sufficient personal estate for that purpose. This statutory contingency is a modification of the common law, and no sale of real estate to pay debts of the estate could be made before this modification. It has been held repeatedly, not only that no sale of real estate can be made except for this purpose, but also that only so much of the real estate can be sold as may be necessary for that purpose, and that, where because of the indivisibility of real estate the whole must be sold, the surplus by the doctrine of equitable conversion is considered as real estate, and as such goes to the heirs." Marvin v. Bowlby, supra [foll Broas v. Broas, 153 Mich. 310, 116 NW 1077].

[a] Effect of statute.—A statute empowering the probate court to apply a debt toward the payment of a legacy or of a distributive share has reference only to such shares as are, or have become in the course of administration, personal property or estate. Jones v. Treadwell, 169 Mass. 430, 48 NE 339.

[b] "There is one recognized exception to the general rule above stated. Indebtedness of the heir to the estate which may be held as an advancement may be considered in the division of the real estate among heirs." Marvin v. [b] In equity a debt due an administrator individually from a distributee may be allowed as a payment on that distributee's share of the estate. Preston v. Davis, 102 Va. 178, 45 SE 865.

[c] A decree for distribution

tions it is held otherwise,[47] unless the distributee consents,[48] or unless the debt is one for advances or disbursements by the representative.[49]

[§ 1319] c. Retainer from Specific Personal Property. Specific personal property awarded to a distributee[50] or a specific legacy[51] is not subject to the representative's right of retainer so long as there are general assets.[52]

[§ 1320] 5. Application of Payments.[53] In accordance with the rule that debts must be paid before legacies or distributive shares, payments to a legatee or distributee should be applied to debts due from the estate to the legatee or distributee before being applied to the legacy or distributive share,[54] and to accrued interest on such debts[55] or distributive shares[56] before application to the principal.

[§ 1321] 6. Notice and Tender. The representative should notify legatees or distributees of his readiness to pay over,[57] and if from any cause he is uncertain who such legatees or distributees are he should institute proceedings to ascertain them.[58] After giving such notice the representative need not make a tender of the amount of the legacy or distributive share to one who is capable of asserting his rights,[59] especially where acceptance of a previous tender has been refused.[60] The personal representative is not required to notify creditors of the distributees before making distribution.[61]

changes the character of the claim for the legacy or distributive share into one against the representative personally, and, in an action of debt on the decree the representative may set off a demand due to him in his own right. Dubois v. Dubois, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 494.

[d] On an accounting between an administrator and a distributee, the amount found to be due the distributee by a commissioner to whom the accounting has been referred is properly credited on a judgment owing to the administrator by the distributee, as of the date when the commissioner closed his account, and not as of the date of the decree. Kent v. Kent, (Va.) 34 SE 32.

McLaughlin v. Barnes, 12 Wash. 373, 41 P 62.

Atkins v. Atkins, 71 Vt. 422, 45 A 1037.

[d] Payment to clerk of court improper.—A statute authorizing the payment by an administrator of money to the clerk for distribution, having been enacted for the convenience of the administrator, he cannot relieve himself from the obligation imposed by the acceptance

resentative[64] or assignee,[65] unless payment to a third person is directed by the legatee or distributee.[66] Ordinarily the court has no jurisdiction to order the funds of the estate paid into court, in the absence of statutory authority, and such payment will not relieve the representative of liability for any loss;[67] but if the persons entitled refuse to accept the amount found due them, the representative may be ordered to pay the amount into court and receive his discharge.[68]

"If Thompson is living, he is entitled to receive the fund. If he has died since Mrs. Bradley's death, his heirs at law are not his legal representatives in the sense in which that term was used by the Court of Probate in its order. That court could not properly undertake to distribute Thompson's estate as a part of the settlement of Mrs. Bradley's. The fund would have to pass to Thompson's administrator or executor for the purpose of distribution, and would be subject to the expense of settling his estate. In the settlement of his estate the Court of Probate would ascertain who are his legal heirs. General Statutes, § 394. The 'legal representative' or 'personal representative' of a deceased person, as the term is ordinarily used, is his executor or administrator. 2 Jarman on Wills (6th Ed.) p. 117. [a] Illustration. — Where a distributee dies before receiving his distributive share, leaving the same heirs as the intestate, owing no debts, and owning no property but his distributive share of the intestate's estate, distribution of his estate should be made directly to the heirs and not to the administrator. [b] Where a widow dies pending the distribution of her husband's estate consisting only of community property, the decree distributing his estate may direct a payment of the widow's interest to her heirs, none of her creditors objecting. McClellan v. Downey, 63 Cal. 520.

or Absent. In cases where there are unknown[72] or absent and unheard-from[73] legatees or distributees it becomes the duty of the personal representative to invest the fund[74] or pay it into court[75] or into the county or state treasury,[76] according to the statute, for the benefit of whoever may subsequently establish a legal right to it.[77] Where decedent was a foreigner, and his next of kin reside in the country of his nativity, the administrator has been allowed to turn over the balance of the estate to the consul general of decedent's country.[78] Where the absence of the person entitled has been so prolonged as to raise a presumption of his death, and an administrator of his estate has been appointed, payment should be to such administrator,[79] or, it has been held, a distribution to the heirs of the absentee may be decreed where his absence, unheard from, long antedated the death of the decedent,[80] or, if the absentee left no heirs, his share may be divided among the other heirs on their executing a refunding bond to indemnify the representative against the claim of such absent heir.[81]

[§ 1325] d. Where Persons Entitled under Disability—(1) Infants. As a general rule a bequest to, or the distributive share of, a minor, when due, can be legally paid only to his properly accredited and qualified guardian,[82] but if there is no properly qualified general guardian it may be paid into

73. [a] Presumption of death of legatee or distributee.—An absent or unknown legatee or distributee will not be presumed to be dead for the purpose of distributing his share in the estate, unless the circumstances of the case are such that his not having been heard of for a long period of years cannot be accounted for without assuming his death. [b] In England under the present practice, where it is doubtful to whom a legacy is payable, the better course is not by payment into court under the Trustee Relief Act, but by an administrative summons waiving accounts simply for the purpose of obtaining the decision of the judge, or, after taking out such summons, where both parties agree by submitting a statement of facts in the nature of a special case for the opinion of the judge. Buck's Est., supra.

court [83] or to the county or city treasurer,[84] as provided by statute. It should not be paid to the minor's parents as such,[85] or to the minor individually,[86] or to a third person as agent or attorney for the minor.[87] But an administrator who pays money in good faith to purchase necessaries for helpless minor children of intestate when they have no guardian, where the purchases are such as a guardian would have made, cannot be made to respond again in an action by a guardian thereafter appointed.[88]

[§ 1326] (2) Insane Persons. The legacy or distributive share of an insane person is properly paid to the committee of his property.[89]

[§ 1327] (3) Married Women. At common law the husband might generally receive the legacy or distributive share of his wife by virtue of his marital rights in her personalty;[90] but under the modern statutes the rule is otherwise; the wife is entitled to receive payment in her own right,[91] and a payment of her legacy or distributive share to her husband will not bind her unless she has authorized or ratified it.[92]

[§ 1328] 8. Equalization of Payments. An equalization of payments is proper where it becomes apparent that some of the beneficiaries have received more than others whose rights are the same.[93]

[§ 1329] K. Payment of Annuities [94]—1. [c] Annuity not deducted from

or settle arrears,[97] or to give security for the payment of future installments,[98] or for restoring the principal to the general legatees on the annuitant's death.[99] Where an executor, in good faith, applied the funds of an estate pro rata in paying annuities, and during six years the widow made no claim that her annuity was entitled to preference, and did not complain until the executor brought suit for the construction of the will, she should be deemed to have acquiesced in the course pursued by the executor, and could not then claim that she was entitled to preferred payment.[1]

Setting apart funds. An executor is also charged with the duty of setting apart and investing a fund with which to raise an annuity provided for by the will, where the will fails to designate such fund or to specify who shall invest it,[2] and it is for him to determine the amount necessary to be set apart for this purpose.[3] He should set apart an amount sufficient in his judgment, in view of present and probable future conditions, to produce such income;[4] and if an excess of income is produced therefrom, it should be distributed among the legatees.[5] Where the executor sets apart from the estate a sufficient sum to meet an annuity, he never parts with the title, and even if it is considered a trust fund for the benefit of the annuitant it must be returned to the executor for administration when the trust terminates.[6]

Where discretionary powers are conferred upon executors respecting the manner of securing or paying annuities, the court will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion in good faith.[7]

[§ 1330] 2. Increase or Reduction of Annuity. The executor may have power under the provisions of the will to increase the annuity at his discretion;[8] but the annuity cannot be reduced thereafter under such power.[9] A release executed by an annuitant to part of the executors does not operate to reduce the annuity, but only to discharge the released executors from liability.[10] If the will vests the executors with discretion to increase an annuity, they may increase it temporarily only and the court has no power to compel them to continue the increased annuity.[11]

[§ 1331] L. Effect of Payment or Distribution in General—1. Conclusiveness and Effect in General. A payment or distribution properly made and receipted for is binding on the representative,[12] un-wages.—Where a will provided for the payment of an annuity to the testator's servant in consideration of faithful services, and also directed that reasonable wages be paid to such servant as long as he remained in the employ of the testator's daughter, it was held that a decree upon the accounting of the executors, authorizing the annuity to be deducted from the servant's wages, was erroneous. less it can be successfully impeached for fraud,[13] mistake,[14] or improper means used in procuring it.[15] It is also binding on the legatee or distributee who accepts the payment or distribution,[16] unless it was made through fraud[17] or mutual mistake;[18] and estops him from claiming as his own, adversely to the estate, property included in the distribution,[19] from assailing the intervening rights of third persons,[20] or from objecting to the representative's course of distribution, however irregular,[21] at least unless he first restores to the representative what he has received.[22] A distribution vests in the legatees or distributees full and complete title to the property which they have received,[23] even though the transfer was not previously authorized,[24] where it was subsequently approved by the probate court.[25] The amount paid to an heir or legatee on the first annual settlement of an administrator is not evidence as to what her interest will amount to after final settlement and order of distribution.[26] Where a person as his mother's heir had an interest in five parcels of land left by the mother's intestate father who left three heirs, and two of the parcels were set off to the mother's heirs and the rest to the other heirs of her father, the distribution confirmed his interest in the two parcels set off to his mother's heirs and destroyed his interest in the other three.[27] Where a will directed that a portion of the estate be held by a trustee to pay the income to a devisee during her life with remainder to her heirs, and in making distribution in the probate court, the distributors consulted the devisee and her son, and no appeal was taken from the distribution, and there was no agreement that the son took any interest, save such as he took by the will, and the devisee and her son supposed and claimed subsequently that the son had a remainder, and testator stated to the son that he had a remainder, it was held that the son as a matter of law having taken no interest under the will, he obtained no interest by the distribution.[28]

A legatee is chargeable with knowledge of the conditions attached to the bequest and of the matters incident to the due course of administration, and cannot plead ignorance in seeking to avoid a deed quitclaiming her rights in the estate of the testator in consideration of receiving a payment of her legacy.[29] and where such distribution is in accordance with a final decree the representative is entitled to his discharge.[32] After distribution he is precluded from thereafter exercising control, as representative, over the property distributed,[33] and if assets fully set apart remain in his possession, he holds them as agent or bailee of the legatee or distributee and not as representative.[34] Where a distributee is entitled to recover his share either from the personal representative or from a third person who has received the same and recovers it by action against the personal representative, the latter is subrogated to the distributee's rights against such third person.[35]

[c] Executrix as life tenant.—(1) The wife of a testator to whom he devised all of his property, real and personal, for her natural life to be used and enjoyed by her as if owned in fee simple, and who was named as executrix, settled an account in the orphans' court in which she charged herself with the inventory of the personal estate, and with debts collected, and credited herself with sums paid out and commissions, the account then reciting that the balance of the estate as therein specified bequeathed to her under the will was retained by her, subject to the provisions of the will. It was held that the account amounted to a distribution of the assets of the estate to the wife for life, and she thereafter held as legatee, and not as executrix, and hence there were no unadministered assets which upon her death would support administration de bonis non, or for which the administrator de bonis non could be required to account. Sydnor v. Graves, 119 Md. 321, 86 A 341. (2) But in another case where a husband gave all of his property to his wife for life, then to surviving heirs, and made his wife executrix, and on the death of the wife a daughter was appointed administratrix of the wife and also administratrix cum testamento annexo of the husband, it was held that where the inventory and account of the wife fairly represented the amount of the estate which she had received under the will, it was proper for her as administratrix of the wife to turn over such estate to herself as administratrix cum testamento annexo of the husband. [a] Where an executor does not prove the will but disposes of the personal estate otherwise than as directed by the will, he is responsible to the legatee for conversion, as is also his executor or administrator, but the latter is not responsible to the administrator with the will annexed of the first testator. Thiefes v. Mason, 55 N. J. Eq. 456, 37 A 455.

[b] Poverty of a legatee does not exonerate the executor from liability for making him a payment unauthorized by the will to the injury of from objecting thereto,[41] and credit on the representative's accounts for improper payments may be denied.[42] The fact that the representative has accounted to one legatee or distributee for less than his legacy or distributive share does not give to another a greater interest in the residue than he was previously entitled to.[43] An action to hold the administrator liable for wrongfully distributing the assets of the estate is not inconsistent with the recovery of such assets or their value from the distributee.[44]

Where an administrator pendente lite pays a legacy to a person entitled to it, which the character of his appointment does not authorize him to do, he will nevertheless be allowed such payment in his accounting, if the estate was able and liable to pay after all prior charges were provided for.[45]

[§ 1335] 2. Payment to Wrong Person.[46] Where an executor or administrator distributes to the wrong person or omits one entitled to share he may be compelled to pay again to the one rightfully entitled,[47] notwithstanding he made the distribution in good faith,[48] acting upon his own judgment or upon the judgment of his counsel.[49]

Assignment of interest of legatee. Where certain executors made payments of income on behalf of a legatee after notice of the assignment of such income to secure money advanced to the legatee, and such income was insufficient to satisfy the debt secured, the executors were not entitled to credit for the amount paid the legatee.[50] So also where executors and trustees charged with the payment of legacies had written notice of the assignment of a legacy, but, instead of turning it over to their successor in the trust at the time of the substitution, one of them a very short time thereafter formally notified the successor of the assignment, the notice inured to the benefit of the assignee, and imposed on the successor the duty of ascertaining the facts by reasonable inquiry, and making the alleged assignee a party to the accounting in its settlement of the trust.[51]

Extent of accounting. Where the assets are distributed between the parties whom the representative understands are entitled to share therein, but by mistake no provision is made for an unknown heir, the distribution should be regarded as a family settlement, and only so much be required to be accounted for as is necessary to satisfy the claim of such heir.[52] Where an administrator of the estate of complainant's daughter made certain distributive payments, etc., to the daughter's husband before notice that the fund in fact belonged to complainant, and not to the daughter's estate, the administrator was only liable for the property remaining in his hands after allowing him such costs and expenses as he was entitled to and payments made to the husband by way of partial distribution.[53]

(3) So also where executors of an estate paid the balance due to certain heirs under the decree of distribution to one who pretended to be the heirs' attorney and who was also acting as attorney for the executors, which payment was in direct violation of an understanding between them that the money should be paid directly to such distributees, the payment was wrongful, and the heirs were entitled to recover the same from the executors. 53. Mayer v. McCracken, 245 Ill. 551, 92 NE 355.

A decree in favor of a distributee who has been erroneously excluded from distribution should be first granted against the distributees respectively for the share of each, and then against the administrators for what they do not pay, and should be estimated upon the value of the property at the time of division, when he was excluded.[54]

Ultimate receipt of property by persons entitled. Where an administrator allowed a person not entitled to share in the distribution, it was held, in determining his liability, that the rightful heirs should be held to account for so much of the fruits of the administrator's unlawful disbursement of trust funds as came to them, by way of gift or inheritance, from the person to whom he improperly gave recognition as an heir.[55]

The representative cannot recover payments voluntarily made to a wrong person, not under a mistake of fact, but under a mistake of law.[56]

[§ 1336] 3. Payment under Will Subsequently Declared Invalid. An executor who comes into possession of property under a will duly authenticated and proved, and parts with it to one having a right under the will to demand it, cannot be held liable to other heirs therefor, if the will is afterward proved invalid or void,[57] unless he had notice of a contest of the will at the time of the payment.[58] But the one receiving such property may be sued by other distributees for the difference between the amount to which he is entitled and the amount so received;[59] or if he is also a creditor of the estate the representative is entitled to credit for the amount so received in a settlement with him.[60] It has also been held that an executor who has paid money to a legatee under a will subsequently set aside may recover back such money from the legatee.[61]

[§ 1337] 4. Payment of Legacy Subsequently Invalidated by Legatee's Contest of Will. Where a testator bequeathed a certain legacy upon condition that it should be forfeited if the legatee in any way contested the will, and after the executrix had paid the legacy the legatee brought an action to have the will declared void, it was held that the executrix could recover back the amount so paid.[62]

[§ 1338] 5. Distribution Prior to Discovery of Will. An administrator who acts with reasonable diligence to ascertain whether a will exists, and does not think, and has no reasonable ground to think, that a will exists, may safely distribute the estate as intestate, and is not liable to the beneficiaries under a will subsequently discovered and probated.[63]

"By section 3848, Ky. Stats. 1903, it is provided that when 'the will under which he (executor) acted shall be declared invalid . . . all . . . lawful acts done by such executor . . . shall remain valid and effectual. . . .' The money paid the bishop of Cork was so paid as directed by the will to execute which Amiss was appointed. Certainly an act done as directed by the will until it is set aside is lawful, in the meaning of the statute. In other words, it means any act done which would have been lawful if the will had not been invalidated, is to be treated as lawful when done before it is invalidated. If that was not the purpose of the statute, it would be meaningless. While the whole will was not declared invalid, the clause in question was, and the reason and purpose of the enactment of the statute applies in the one as in the other case. Acts done by the executor after the probate of the will and before it is invalidated are binding, and are not affected by the nullification of the will. Jones v. Jones, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 464; Woods v. Nelson, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 600. A court of competent jurisdiction probates the will, and the will and order of probate authorizes the executor to act as it were for the testator. And it is essential to the safety of the community, and but giving due respect to the authority of judicial proceedings, that the lawful acts done under a will before it is invalidated, should be treated as valid." [c] Payment to the surrogate before a decree settling the representative's accounts of an amount due a distributee is not a good payment to the latter, and the representative may be compelled to pay again upon faith in making such payments,[66] and in ignorance of the existence of any debt or claim against the estate.[67] Such distribution is, however, perfectly legal,[68] and divests the personal representative of title to the property delivered to the legatee or distributee.[69] Furthermore the representative may be entitled to credit for the payments made, if they are correct and not more than the recipient's distributive share,[70] and will be protected by a subsequent decree authorizing such payments,[71] or allowing an account in which such payments are stated.[72]

[§ 1340] 7. Payment under Order of Court. A payment or distribution in good faith in accordance with an order or decree of court will generally protect a representative and release him from further liability,[73] although the order or decree is subsequently reversed,[74] unless it merely orders distribution without determining the persons entitled or their shares,[75] or does not dispose of the whole estate.[76] But he is not protected if he makes payment or distribution in bad faith under an order which is void,[77] or which orders distribution before the payment of debts,[78] or which has been obtained by him in bad faith.[79] It has also been held that the representative is not protected where such payment or distribution is made before the time for appealing from the order has expired,[80] although there is, on the other hand, authority for the view that an administrator will be protected in a distribution made in good faith before any stay is had or appeal taken, although it was made before the time for appealing had expired.[81]

[a] This rule is modified in England (1) by a statute authorizing executors and administrators to advertise for creditors, and providing that after such advertisement they may "distribute the Assets of the Testator or Intestate, or any Part thereof, amongst the Parties entitled thereto, having regard to the Claims of which such Executor or Administrator has then Notice, and shall not be liable for the Assets or any Part thereof so distributed to any Person of whose Claim such Executor or Administrator shall not have had Notice at the Time of Distribution of the said Assets, or a Part thereof, as the Case may be." St. 22 & 23 Vict. c 35, § 29. (2) Under this statute it is held that an executor who has distributed the assets of his testator, after issuing advertisements and taking the steps pointed out by the act, will have the same protection as if he had administered the estate under a decree of the court; and if he should have retained any legacies as trustee after appropriating them for the benefit of the cestui que trust, he will no longer be under any liability qua executor. [c] Executors with power to act independently of the probate court have the legal right, independent of any judicial decree, to relinquish their administrative authority over any part of the estate, and whether a consent decree, in a suit against them, distributing the estate, is one which they or the heirs can be compelled to observe or not, it embodies an agreement as binding as a judgment to the same effect, in passing their possessory rights as executors, and, although more comprehensive than the agreement itself, it is a judicial construction thereof and must be regarded as having received their full assent as entered. [d] Where administration unnecessary.—One who was guardian of testatrix's children, and was also appointed administrator of her estate when there was no necessity for administration, there being no debts and all of the property being devised to another in trust for the children, was not bound to procure an order of the probate court directing him to turn the property over to the trustee in order to authorize him to do so, and the fact that he turned it over at various times, instead of all at one time, would not make him liable. "It is a common practice, when the distributees are known and their shares undisputed, to pay them what is due without a decree of distribution, and to credit the payments in the final account. When such payments are made, and are credited in the account, and the distributees assent to the account, or have notice of it and make no objection to the allowance of it, or are heard upon the allowance of it, and their objections are overruled, we see no reason why the account should not be allowed. If the distributees have actually received all they are entitled to, they ought not to be heard to complain that the formality of obtaining a decree of distribution has been omitted. An administrator distributing the property without a decree of distribution incurs the risk that there may be disributees who are not bound by the allowance of his account; but if he is willing to take this risk, the distributees who have received all they are entitled to cannot complain of the procedure." [§ 1341] 8. Payment or Distribution before Debts Are Paid. The debts of a decedent being entitled to priority over legacies and distributive shares,[82] a representative who makes distribution to legatees or distributees without taking a refunding bond[83] before the payment of debts is guilty of a devastavit, and personally liable to unpaid creditors prejudiced thereby, who present or give notice of their claims within the time prescribed by statute,[84] although he was ignorant of the existence of such claims at the time of such distribution,[85] or has subsequently settled his accounts

[b] A creditor's refusal to accept certain funds in payment of his claim relieves the representative from liability for turning over such funds to the legatees without taking a refunding bond. Ramsay v. Hanner, 64 N. C. 668.

[c] A creditor who tells an executor to settle with a distributee "without regard to my account" does not exonerate the executor from taking bonds from the distributees and holding assets until all the debts of which he had notice are satisfied. Dye v. Claunch, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 659.

(2) Where there was a premature order of the court for distribution which the representative did not oppose. McNeir v. Ragland, 16 N. C. 516. (3) Where the representative procured an erroneous dismissal of the claim, order of distribution, and discharge. Villaneuva v. Chavez, 24 Philippine 170. (4) Where the creditor had given the testator what purported to be a release and which the executor bona fide believed to be valid, although the creditor did not question the validity of the release until after the executor had paid the legacy. Jefferys v. Jefferys, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 177.

[b] A testamentary provision that legacies be paid "as soon as practicable" does not change the liability of the representative in this respect. Lewis v. Carson, 93 Mo. 587, 3 SW 483, 6 SW 365.

[c] A distribution by agreement among the persons entitled does not relieve the representative from liability for debts left unpaid. Long v. Mitchell, 63 Ga. 769; Drayton v. Drayton, 1 S. C. Eq. 557.

[d] That a debt is secured by a mortgage on real estate does not justify the payment of legacies before ascertaining the existence of assets sufficient to pay all debts, and in case of a judgment for a deficiency on a foreclosure and a sale of the mortgaged premises the judgment creditor may compel the executor to account. Glacius v. Fogel, 4 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 516.

[e] Contingent liabilities are within the rule. Pearson v. Archdeaken, 1 Alc. & N. 23.

[f] Liability for interest.—(1) The representative is liable for interest on the amount prematurely distributed (Cookus v. Peyton, 1 Gratt. (42 Va.) 431) (2) from the time of distribution (Cochran v. Cochran, 2 S. C. Eq. 521), or (3) from a date one year later than the date of the testamentary letters (Rote v. Warner, 17 Oh. Cir. Ct. 350, 9 Oh. Cir. Dec. 540). (4) He is only liable for the amount distributed without interest (McKinzie v. Smith, 3 N. C. 372) (5) where by reason of such distribution he has been compelled to borrow money to pay debts and is not allowed credit for interest paid on the money so borrowed (Matter of Oosterhoudt, 15 Misc. 566, 38 NYS 179, 1 Gibb. Surr. 516).

[g] Property improperly distributed is to be estimated, in an action by a creditor against the executor, as assets in his hands, at its increased value and not as it was when received or distributed. Mason County Justices v. Lee, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 247.

[h] The fact that the assets turned over to the legatee would have been lost if retained by the executor is immaterial as regards his liability to creditors. Morrison v. Lavell, 81 Va. 519 (where the executor turned over slaves who were subsequently emancipated by the federal government).

[i] Distribution by an executor to himself as devisee or heir at law with notice of an outstanding debt against his testator does not give him a title free from the ordinary legal lien of a judgment de bonis testatoris subsequently rendered against him in favor of the creditor. McMillan v. Toombs, 79 Ga. 143, 4 SE 16.

and been discharged;[86] and he cannot relieve himself from liability by proof that his coexecutor had received assets sufficient to pay all debts.[87] Where, however, the representative has given notice to creditors to present their claims, a distribution made in ignorance of the existence of claims which are not presented within the time prescribed for such presentation subjects him to no liability to the holders of such claims.[88] It has been held that the representative incurs no liability where he retains assets sufficient to pay all claims,[89] but there is also authority for the view that if the assets so retained are lost, or become insufficient, the representative is liable to creditors even though such loss or decrease in value was not due to any fault or negligence on his part.[90] The representative is not liable to a creditor who consented to the distribution,[91] or misled him so as to induce him to pay out the assets to legatees or distributees.[92]

[§ 1342] 9. Overpayment. Where the representative pays to one legatee or distributee more than is due him, the amount of the overpayment is, in legal contemplation, still in his hands as assets which he must pay over to the persons entitled thereto,[93] and an order for immediate payment to an unpaid legatee may be made without waiting until the executor has recovered from other legatees the excess paid to them.[94] If, however, the error or inequality has occurred on partial distribution, it may be rectified on a subsequent or final distribution,[95] and the excess may be retained from the future income or shares of the ones so overpaid.[96]

"An overpayment made by the executor to any person entitled to a distributive share does not in any way diminish the amount of the estate which the law says is in the executor's hands for distribution. The law does not recognize any such overpayment, and does not, therefore, permit the executor to credit himself with the amount of the excess. In legal contemplation the sum is in the hands of the executor as assets of the estate which he must pay over to the parties entitled thereto." In re Underhill, 117 N. Y. 471, 475, 22 NE 1120.

Spaulding v. Wakefield, 53 Vt. 660, 38 AmR 709.

Of course the fact that the representative has made an overpayment to one legatee or distributee does not bind him to make like payments to others.[97]

Cline v. Waters, 90 SW 231, 28 KyL 679.

[b] A note given by the representative in payment in lieu of cash or property may be scaled to the true amount of the legacy or distributive share where it appears that it had been made for more than the amount due. Barnes v. Stephenson, 22 Ga. 209.

[c] Moneys paid under an erroneous decree of distribution, being assets of the estate, are properly recoverable in an action at law. Lawyers' Surety Co. v. Reinach, 25 Misc. 150, 54 NYS 205 [aff 23 Misc. 242, 51 NYS 162].

[d] The assignment of a mortgage in payment of a legacy less in amount than the nominal amount of the mortgage does not make the legatee responsible for the nominal excess, where he has with proper diligence and in good faith sold the property under a decree of foreclosure for less than the amount of his legacy. Hammond v. Lewis, 1 How. (U. S.) 14, 11 L. ed. 30.

Matter of Bielby, 91 Misc. 353, 155 NYS 133.

[f] Priority.—Upon the death of an overpaid distributee, the claim for repayment of the excess will not take precedence over the claims of creditors of such distributee. Williams v. McCardell, 14 S. C. 219.

[g] The burden of proving that the amount received was excessive is upon the person requiring the money to be refunded. Peterson v. Peterson, L. R. 3 Eq. 111.

[h] Defenses based on the representative's wrongdoing in distributing such excess cannot be set up in an action therefor. Lawyers' Surety Co. v. Reinach, 23 Misc. 242, 51 NYS 162 [aff 25 Misc. 150, 54 NYS 205].

[i] Set-off.—As a representative's right of action for restitution in such case is in his representative capacity, a claim against him individually cannot be set off against the claim for restitution. Lawyers' Surety Co. v. Reinach, 25 Misc. 150, 54 NYS 205 [aff 23 Misc. 242, 51 NYS 162]. See also Stevens v. Goodell, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 34 (amount due from former executor cannot be set off in action by administrator de bonis non).

[j] Extent of liability.—Where an administrator, who was also one of the distributees of the estate, wrongfully paid therefrom money in excess of the amount to which he and his brother were entitled to a certain person for the purchase of certain stock for the benefit of himself and his brother, and such person had knowledge that the money so paid belonged to the estate, he was liable, in the absence of debts against the estate, to return to the administrator de bonis non only the excess over the amounts to which the administrator and his brother were entitled as distributees. Caviness v. Maryland Fidelity, etc., Co., 140 N. C. 58, 52 SE 265.

[k] Liability not a charge on realty.—The liability to repay does not constitute a charge upon such party's share in decedent's land. Wilcoxen v. Donnelly, 90 N. C. 245.

[l] Relief in equity.—Where, by mistake as to the condition of the estate, the executor pays to a legatee more than his share, or if by some unforeseen cause, for which the executor is not responsible and which clearly could not reasonably have been anticipated, it turns out on a final settlement that he has overpaid some of the legatees, the executor, after making good to the other legatees their share, may have relief in equity against the overpaid legatees. [§ 1344] b. Restitution on Reversal of Decree. Upon the reversal of a decree of distribution the parties are in the same position as if no decree had been rendered, and the personal representative is entitled to restitution of all the property distributed under such decree, or its value,[10] including any part thereof which has been assigned or transferred by the distributee.[11]

[§ 1345] 11. Waiver, Estoppel, or Ratification. A distributee or surviving spouse may waive objections to a distribution on the ground that it was premature,[12] or may be estopped to object.[13] So also the beneficiaries may so ratify a payment made before an order or decree of court as to preclude objection on their part.[14]

[a] Executors can maintain an action against a devisee for the restitution of property constituting assets of the estate delivered over by them under a decree of distribution subsequently reversed, although such property was not "actually delivered," but was used by them, with the consent and under the direction of the legatee, to discharge her debts. Ashton v. Heydenfeldt, 127 Cal. 442, 59 P 759.

[b] Where the estate consists of corporate stock (1) which is delivered and transferred on the books of the corporation to distributees pending an appeal from the decree of distribution, which is subsequently reversed, the representative is upon such reversal entitled to the stock. (2) He may sue to recover the dividends thereon, notwithstanding others appear as owners on the books of the corporation. Ashton v. Zeila Min. Co., 134 Cal. 408, 60 P 494.

[c] Jurisdiction. — The superior court has power to compel the delivery of property received by defendant under a decree of distribution, which is reversed, even though the property is of such a character that it cannot be seized under a writ of replevin. Ashton v. Heydenfeldt, 124 Cal. 14, 56 P 624; Heydenfeldt v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 117 Cal. 348, 49 P 210.

[d] Action at law proper. — Moneys paid by an administratrix under an erroneous decree of distribution, being assets of the estate, are properly recoverable in an action at law. Lawyers' Surety Co. v. Reinach, 25 Misc. 150, 54 NYS 205 [aff 23 Misc. 242, 51 NYS 162].

[e] Defenses.—It is no defense: (1) That the property sought to be recovered was not subject to an outstanding mortgage, owing to the existence of which the decree of distribution was reversed. Ashton v. Heggerty, 130 Cal. 516, 62 P 934. (2) That the distributee is the owner of the property involved in the proceeding. Heydenfeldt v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 117 Cal. 348, 49 P 210.

[f] Set-off against representative.—Where an administratrix paid moneys of an estate under an erroneous decree of distribution, the right of action for their recovery is not in her personal, but in her representative, character. Hence, in such action, a claim against plaintiff individually cannot be set off. Lawyers' Surety Co. v. Reinach, 25 Misc. 150, 54 NYS 205 [aff 23 Misc. 242, 51 NYS 162].

Ashton v. Heggerty, 130 Cal. 516, 62 P 934.

[a] Assent to unequal division.—By law, an administrator is bound to make equal distribution, and to deliver to each distributee his equal share of the estate; and if he withholds from one the whole or any part of his full share, it is no excuse that he has delivered it to another; no more than an undue application of the assets in the payment of debts would justify the neglect of any particular creditor; but if the distributees accept the shares awarded to them they are bound thereby although the division was unequal. Election of distributees. When a representative keeps an estate together without authority, distributees may elect to take the profits or to charge him with rent.[23]

Effect of Death of Representative. Upon the death of a representative who has neglected or failed to pay a legacy or distributive share, his representative is liable to the legatee or distributee, provided sufficient assets come to his hands from the original estate, or from the estate of such deceased representative.[24] The person entitled may elect either to present the sum due him as a claim against the deceased representative's estate [25] or to proceed upon the deceased representative's bond.[26]

[b] Extent of liability.—(1) An executor neglecting to execute the trusts of a will is not absolutely liable for the legacy, but only to the extent of what he actually receives, unless there has been supine negligence on his part. Pulliam v. Pulliam, 10 Fed. 23. (2) Where an executrix has wrongfully refused to pay over a legacy to a distributee, she is chargeable in her individual capacity both with interest and costs of a suit by the legatee to recover the same. St. Mary's Hospital v. Perry, 152 Cal. 338, 92 P 864. (3) A legatee is entitled to recover damages equal to the legacy against an executor who has violated his covenant to pay the legacy. Com. v. Heaveren, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 126.

[c] Mere neglect to pay the balance of a legacy does not render the executor personally liable, unless he claims to be himself entitled thereto, or is proved guilty of some illegal conduct in the premises. Hurlbut v. Durant, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 481.

[a] Pendency of litigation. — Where, on the hearing of an application to settle an administrator's third account, it appeared that the administrator had paid a dividend to creditors, as ordered by the court, and had obeyed all of the court's orders in the estate, that every item of the account was correct, and that there was still undisposed of at the hearing property of the appraised value of twenty-seven hundred and fifty dollars, the fact that the estate had been pending several years, during which there had been litigation which was appealed to the supreme court, did not establish that the administrator had willfully or negligently caused the delay. In re Sylvar, 1 Cal. A. 35, 81 P 663.

of a year from the death of decedent,[36] and where an order or decree for distribution is made, interest usually runs from the date thereof, even though the person entitled to the award makes no demand therefor.[37] Where an executor wrongfully refuses to pay a legacy, interest will be allowed thereon from the date of the filing of the petition in the probate court requesting such payment.[38] In a case where a mandate of the supreme court awarded to the widow the benefits that would have come to her had she taken under the statute as of the time such benefits would in that event have reached her in possession, and required her to account for money or property received by her "as of the time of the receipt thereof," it was held that she should have been allowed interest from the time she should have received the principal of her property had she taken under the statute.[39]

Simple or compound interest. Only simple interest will be allowed against a representative where he has been merely negligent[40] or the distributee has been dilatory in calling him to account,[41] but where the failure to pay over is due to active misconduct on the part of the representative, he may be charged with compound interest.[42] It has been said, however, that the compounding of interest is warranted only in extreme cases.[43]

A payment to a legatee, out of a balance in the hands of the representative, on which interest runs, must be credited as of the time when payment was made.[44]

[§ 1349] 2. After Tender of Payment. Where the representative makes tender of what he may rightly pay or distribute at the time, interest on the sum tendered cannot be claimed by the legatee or distributee refusing or unreasonably delaying to receive the same,[45] unless after such tender and refusal the representative misappropriates the fund.[46] But where a demand for a legacy is made after its tender and refusal and the executor then refuses to pay, he is chargeable with interest from that time.[47]

[§ 1350] 3. Failure to Invest Share.[48] Where by the terms of the will, by order of court, or otherwise, it becomes the duty of the representative to invest the funds of a legatee or distributee in his hands, he will be chargeable with interest thereon if he negligently delays or fails to do so.[49]

"It is true the plaintiff was only required to pay debts as soon as it could be conveniently done, but he was not made the arbitrary judge of what was convenient time. In the absence of proof of special difficulty or complication, the law regards one year a sufficient period to collect assets and pay debts. Here the assets were in the hands of the executor, and the liabilities of the estate small and furnishing no real ground for dispute. The plaintiff testifies he could not raise the money to settle his liability, but does not speak of any effort he made to do so. On the contrary, he refused to borrow money when offered to him for the purpose of settling up the estate. He has all the time had the possession and use of the land devised to him. The charge of interest is plainly just and equitable, and it was properly not limited to the time when the plaintiff was offered the loan of money to settle the estate." Lowman v. Lowman, supra.

[a] Source of legacy.—The fact that a part of the money from which a pecuniary legacy was to be paid was to be derived from the fund appointed in trust to testator's executors under a will did not change the character of the legacy, nor the time when it became payable, and the legatee was entitled to interest on the legacy after a year from the testator's death. Claflin v. Holmes, 202 Mass. 157, 88 NE 664.

[b] The fact that a legatee contested the will, which delayed its probate, is no defense to her right to recover interest on her unpaid legacy after one year from the date of testator's death. Claflin v. Holmes, 202 Mass. 157, 88 NE 664.

[a] Liability to residuary legatees.—An order directing an investment for specific legatees imposes no duty upon the representative to make such investment for the benefit of the residuary estate, and consequently he will not be liable to residuary legatees for interest on the fund, although it has never been invested. Miller's App., 127 Pa. 95, 17 A 866.

[b] Compound interest (1) may be charged against the representative where his delay or negligence amounts to a violation of his trust (Darne v. Catlett, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 475; Salisbury v. Persons Beneficially Interested. Persons beneficially interested in the estate in the hands of the representative, as legatees or distributees, or as heirs or devisees where the representative has the duty of distributing realty or the proceeds thereof, have the right to institute proceedings for distribution.[52] A widow is entitled to compel distribution of her deceased husband's estate in all respects like a distributee,[53] and a petition for distribution may also be filed by a widower who has elected to take against his wife's will.[54]

[§ 1353] b. Assignees of Persons Beneficially Interested.[55] It has been considered that an assignee or purchaser of a legacy or distributive share cannot file an original petition for the distribution of the estate, or the payment of such legacy or share,[56] unless such right is given by statute,[57] for the reason that an assignment or pledge of a distributive share is not enforceable by a probate court.[58] But on the other hand, in a case where the only assets belonging to the estate of a deceased wife were the proceeds of the sale of certain timber, it was held that the assignee of the husband, who was entitled to a share thereof, could maintain a bill for the distribution of the fund in the hands of the administrator.[59]

[h] Testamentary trusts.—A statute giving a right of action to a distributee against the administrator for his share does not apply to a trust fund created by the sale of land by an administrator with the will annexed, the proceeds of which he is directed by a will to distribute, the only right of action which he has in such case being to compel execution of the trust and an accounting for a reasonable part of the money collected. a statute allowing a legatee or distributee to do so;[61] nor has he a right to apply for a division of lands devised,[62] unless the will invests him with powers and duties with respect to land which he would not ordinarily have.[63]

[§ 1355] 2. Nature of Proceeding. The proceeding to obtain a decree of distribution is not in the nature of a suit between party and party in which one seeks to recover a right withheld by the other; but is analogous in its character to a proceeding in rem, in which a decision between the parties before the court settles the rights of all parties to the property in question.[64]

[§ 1356] 3. Mode or Form of Proceeding. The mode or form of proceeding for the recovery of a legacy or distributive share is generally regulated by statute,[65] the usual form being an application or petition[66] for an order of distribution[67] or for an order directing payment of a particular legacy,[68] although under some statutes an action at law may be maintained for the recovery of a legacy or distributive share.[69] One who is part owner of a note as beneficiary under a will has the remedies of compelling the administrator to sue, or, where the other owners refuse to join as plaintiffs, of suing in equity making them the defendants, bringing whole controversy before the court in one suit.[70] It has been held that a petition in the orphans' court for a rule to show cause why real estate of a decedent should not be turned over by the executors to a beneficiary under the will should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.[71] Although the statutes make the civil rules of practice and procedure applicable to probate matters, the rules will not be applied as strictly in such matters as petitions for distribution.[72]

[§ 1357] 4. Conditions Precedent. Although a refunding bond may be required before distribution is made,[73] the execution of such a bond is not necessary in order to entitle one to maintain a bill to compel distribution,[74] nor is it necessary to file such a bond with the petition.[75] But it has been held that an offer to give a refunding bond is necessary, where it is not averred and proved that the estate has been settled or that there will remain a balance after settlement.[76] Demand of and refusal by the representative are conditions precedent to an action at law for a legacy, and must be alleged and proved,[77] but an heir may maintain an action to recover his distributive share of the estate without a probate order for distribution.[78]

[§ 1358] 5. Time for Proceeding—a. Premature Proceedings. In some states an action for a distributive share may be brought any time after the expiration of one year from the time of the qualification of the representative.[79] It has been held, however, that an action to recover an alleged distributive share is premature when it is brought before final settlement of the estate or an order of distribution,[80] and although the statute authorizes a legatee to recover his legacy in an action at law, a legatee cannot recover in an action of contract against the executors unless the legacy is then payable.[81] Where the statute authorizes an action to recover a distributive share after a year from the granting of letters testamentary or of administration, an action by decedent's widow to recover her interest in the estate, brought within three months after the granting of letters, is premature.[82]

A Court of chancery will not give directions concerning the distribution of a testamentary fund until the time for distribution arrives,[83] and it has been held that the rule that an action at law does not lie to recover a distributive share of an estate before the amount to be distributed has been ascertained in the probate court also prevails in equity in the absence of other and compelling reasons.[84]

[§ 1359] b. Limitations. By analogy to the statute of limitations a proceeding in the probate court to compel the payment of a legacy or distributive share should be instituted within the time in which suits of the same character are required to be commenced in courts of common law or of equity,[85] and it has been held that in such cases the statute begins to run at the time of final settlement of the representative's account,[86] or of the order of court directing distribution.[87] But as against a proceeding by subsequently discovered heirs to obtain an order for the payment to them of moneys paid into the state treasury by the administrator under an order of the probate court because there were no known heirs, limitation begins to run only from the date of publication by the administrator of the special notice required by statute to be given the unknown heirs.[88] Where bequests of a fund are not payable until the death of a life tenant, who is custodian of the fund, and a proceeding is begun within a year after his death to compel his administrator to account for and pay over the same to the administratrix de bonis non with the will annexed of the original testator, such proceeding is not barred in six years after the original executor could have been made to account to the legatees;[89] but the limitation applicable to such a proceeding is ten years from the appointment of an administrator of the custodian's estate, and the appointment of the petitioner as administratrix.[90] Where, on the final settlement of the account of an executor, one who claimed that he was the legatee intended in a certain legacy in the will appeared and claimed the legacy, a contention by the executor that limitations had run against claimant, because he could not be considered as named in the will owing to the fact that it would require extrinsic evidence to enable the court to recognize him as the legatee, was of no avail.[91] Where the settlement of the estate of a testator is justifiably delayed through a number of years, owing to the nature of the property and liabilities of the testator, limitation does not run against the claims of residuary legatees to their respective shares during the time of such delay.[92]

[§ 1360] c. Laches. Laches has been held no defense to the claim of a distributee of an estate, under an award by the orphans' court against an administrator, who had wrongfuly paid claimant's share to a person having no authority to receive it.[93] So also, in a case where testator's daughter made demand upon the executor within a reasonable time for the payment of an annuity due under the will, and he declined payment, assuring her that a delay in settling the estate was not only unavoidable, but beneficial to all parties interested, her claim was not barred by laches because she took no legal steps to collect it for about twenty-seven years after probate, the estate having been in the meantime under the control of the court, and the available property not more than enough to pay the estate's debts.[94]

[§ 1361] 6. Defenses. In an action by an heir at law for his distributitve share, the administrator may plead and prove debts due by the estate and thus protect himself and creditors;[95] and the fact that the assets are insufficient to pay all legacies in full may be available as part of the defense on a petition against the executors on a claim for a legacy which they have refused to pay.[96] Where an administrator files an account in which he blends the estate of his own intestate with the estate of a decedent of whom his intestate was executor, and the account shows a balance in his hands for distribution, and no objection is made to the account or to the irregular blending of the two estates, the administrator cannot set up his own irregularity, when the distributees seek to enforce the payment of the money which the administrator has acknowledged that he received.[97] The fact that a will makes the distribution of the income a duty of the executors does not, where such distribution is mandatory, unless all executors and trustees concur in deferring it, preclude the probate court from ordering the distribution by a collector acting as administrator pending the probate of the will.[98]

[b] The clerk of the superior court has by statute, in North Carolina, probate jurisdiction of such matters, and the superior court has no jurisdiction on petition, motion, or summary order to direct the disposition of money paid into the office of such clerk by executors or administrators. Ex p. Cassidey, 95 N. C. 225.

[c] Where infants interested.—The probate court may exercise such jurisdiction even though the parties interested are infants, for whom such court has no authority to appoint a guardian ad litem. Williams v. Holmes, 9 Md. 281.

[d] Proceedings by after discovered heirs.—The probate court has jurisdiction to order payment from the state treasury to subsequently discovered heirs of money paid in under its order because there were no known heirs, notwithstanding the statute of escheats, giving the circuit court jurisdiction where there are no known heirs. In re Bomino, 83 Mo. 433.

[e] The pendency of a controversy as to the ownership of the property does not affect the jurisdiction of the probate court to enter an order of distribution subject to the pending suit. In re Richards, 133 Cal. 524, 65 P 1034.

[f] Where litigation concerning estate finally settled.—Where whatever litigation there had been concerning an estate had been finally determined, and two appeals taken had been disposed of, an objection to the jurisdiction of the court to render a decree of final distribution by reason of unsettled litigation was unsustainable. Drasdo v. Jobst, 39 Wash. 425, 81 P 857.

[g] Fund consisting in part of proceeds of realty.—Where part of the funds in the hands of the executor and trustee of decedent consists of rents and from his real estate, the surrogate's court has jurisdiction to determine the widow's rights in the realty in order to make distribution. Matter of McKinley, 66 Misc. 126, 122 NYS 807, 7 Mills Surr. 387.

[h] Retention of jurisdiction.—The children of a decedent petitioned the court for an order for the sale of realty to pay debts, and thereby preserve the personalty. The court entered a decree directing a sale of the realty, and appointed a commissioner to make the sale. The commissioner made a report that he had made a sale, and a decree confirming the sale and directing the administrator to charge himself with the proceeds and account for the same in due course of administration in paying the debts was made. At a subsequent term a petition was filed praying for the distribution of the personal estate. The court entered a decree reciting that the cause had been retained for further decrees, and directing that the same be referred to a person named, to take testimony as to the value of the property and the amount advanced to the distributees, etc. At a subsequent term such person filed his report, to which was attached the administrator's account, showing the receipts of the administrator. The court entered a decree confirming the report of the administrator and for the distribution of the estate. It was held that in view of the recitals in the second decree rendered, the cause was retained after the rendition of the first decree for further orders and decrees, and the court had jurisdiction to enter the decree confirming the administrator's report. Settle v. Settle, 141 N. C. 553, 54 SE 445.

[i] Money not received by representative as such.—Money received by the representative from the estate of a deceased brother of the testator and to which the heirs are entitled is not within the jurisdiction of the probate court and can be recovered by the heirs from the representative only by a suit in a court of ordinary jurisdiction. (2) Where the statute directs payment and distribution of an estate to creditors, legatees, next of kin, husband and wife of decedent, or their assigns, and provides for the determination by the decree to whom a debt, claim, or distributive share is payable, claimants other than those having legal titles will not be recognized, but those claiming interests adversely to such titles, on grounds of equity, will be remitted to other tribunals. [a] Illustration. — The district court has jurisdiction of a suit by the distributees against the administrator, in which it appears that administration has been pending during twelve years, that during the last three years the administrator has claimed the property as his own and has sold part, that the debts are all paid, and that the administrator's bond is worthless, although it does not appear that the estate has been settled in the probate court. Hill v. Townsend, 24 Tex. 575.

[b] Showing necessary to give equity jurisdiction.—In order to give courts of equity jurisdiction to superintend the settlement of an estate or to distribute the legacies at the instance and request of the executor, he must show some special circumstance, such as a trust devolved upon him by the will, and about which he is doubtful, or at least something more than the mere payment over of a legacy after the debts of decedent are paid. Woods v. Fuller, 61 Md. 457.

[c] Where there is no embarrassment as to the proper mode of administering the estate, the fact that the parties differ as to the distribution which shall be made of the residue does not authorize a suit in equity by the administrator to have the probate court instructed as to what distribution should be made. Toland v. Earl, 129 Cal. 148, 61 P 914, 79 AmSR 100.

[d] When the order of distribution is made, the powers of the probate court are exhausted and it has no jurisdiction to entertain a petition brought to enforce the collection of the amount awarded to the distributee as a debt against the administrator. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 4 Oh. St. 508, 64 AmD 603.

[e] Interpretation of will.—Jurisdiction will be entertained of a suit in equity against an executrix and widow for the sale of land and division of the proceeds among the heirs, without dower to the widow, where there are no disputed questions of fact, the real question being the interpretation of the will and no objection to the jurisdiction is made. Taylor v. Leesnitzer, 37 App. (D. C.) 356.

[f] Effect of issues as to fact or validity of conveyance.—A statute authorizing a court of probate to order distribution, although some of the heirs, legatees, or devisees have conveyed their shares, applies only where no question arises on the distribution as to the conveyances having been made; and, where the fact of conveyance is disputed or its validity is in issue, the question is not within probate jurisdiction. "matters of probate" including the determination of the persons succeeding to the estate, either as heir, devisee, or legatee, the amount to which each is entitled, and the construction of the will, but not including a determination of claims against heirs or devisees for their portion arising subsequent to decedent's death. In re Howe, 161 Cal. 152, 118 P 515.

[g] Conflicting claims under judgment, execution, and assignment.—Where, in probate proceedings for the distribution of the estate of a decedent, there were conflicting claims to the interest of the surviving husband of decedent, one party claiming under an execution sale of the husband's interest, another claiming as a judgment creditor of the husband, and another claiming under an assignment prior to the execution sale, the court must remit claimants to a court of competent jurisdiction to determine the conflicting claims. In re Howe, 161 Cal. 152, 118 P 515.

[h] Determination as to character of legacy.—Under statutes declaring that the judge of probate has jurisdiction of all matters relating to the settlement of estates, and providing that when, on the settlement of any account of an administrator or executor, there appears to remain in his hands property not necessary for the payment of debts and expenses of administration, nor specifically bequeathed, the judge shall determine who are entitled to the estate, and their respective shares therein under the will or according to law, it is not necessary that the question whether a legacy was specific or demonstrative should have been determined as a preliminary question by a court of equity, and not upon appeal by the supreme court of probate. Stilphen's App., 100 Me. 146, 60 A 888, 4 AnnCas 158.

[i] Where it is the duty of the executor to select from the stocks and bonds left by testator a sufficient amount to make up deficiencies in funds bequeathed in trust, his failure to do so entitles the beneficiary to relief in equity. Blair v. Scribner, 67 N. J. Eq. 583, 60 A 211.

[j] Objection not ousting probate jurisdiction.—Where, on an application of an assignee of decedent's widow for a partial distribution of the estate, the petitioner simply demanded a certain sum from the amount shown by the executor's account to be in his hands, which included the profits of a certain business operated by the executor, but which was closed prior to the proceedings in question, an objection that the superior court sitting in probate had no jurisdiction of a controversy between the executor and the petitioner as to the profits of such business was unfounded. In re Straus, 144 Cal. 553, 77 P 1122.

[k] The superior court in Ohio by virtue of its chancery powers has jurisdiction of an action by one or more heirs: (1) To compel distribution. Cadwallader v. Longley, 1 Disn. (Oh.) 497, 12 Oh. Dec. (Reprint) 756. (2) To compel the payment of legacies by the executor. Guiou v. Guiou, 5 Oh. Dec. (Reprint) 205, 3 AmLRec 475.

[b] Where the estate consists of corporate stock, which has been allotted to the widow as administratrix, and a suit in equity is brought by certain of the heirs to set aside as fraudulent a transfer of other corporate stock by the corporation to a third person and to determine complainants' rights in the stock and for other relief, all the parties being before the court, it can enter a decree requiring the widow to convey to each of the heirs his proper share in the stock allotted to her as administratrix. Jones v. Green, 129 Mich. 203, 88 NW 1047, 95 AmSR 433.

[c] Probate jurisdiction purely statutory.—The jurisdiction of the prerogative court, over accounts of executors at least, is wholly statutory, and except by statute it has no authority to order distribution by executors under a will, such distribution being wholly a matter of chancery jurisdiction. Van Houten v. Stevenson, 74 N. J. Eq. 1, 77 A 612.

the amount of costs, charges, etc., properly to be deducted.[7]

Court of domicile of decedent. The distribution of personal property must be under the authority of the court where decedent was domiciled, in the state or country where the principal administration was granted.[8]

As between different courts of probate the court in which administration was granted has exclusive jurisdiction to decree distribution.[9]

The res over which the court acquires jurisdiction in a proceeding for final distribution of the property of an estate is the entire remaining property of the estate, and not merely that specifically enumerated in the petition, and it is the duty of the court to distribute all to the persons entitled thereto.[10]

Presumption of jurisdiction. Where the court has general jurisdiction of the subject matter, jurisdiction of a particular case will be presumed to exist, where no facts depriving the court of jurisdiction appear.[11]

Where an executor has assented to a pecuniary legacy, it becomes a debt to be recovered in the court having jurisdiction of actions to recover ordinary debts rather than in the court of probate jurisdiction.[12]

[§ 1363] 8. Process or Notice. In order to warrant an order for distribution, notice of the proceedings therefor must be given, in the manner prescribed by statute[13] or by the court,[14] to the personal representative,[15] and to all distributees, legatees, or other persons interested in the distribution,[16] unless the persons who are entitled to notice appear in the proceeding for distribution and waive notice.[17]

Notice of settlement of accounts is not, according to some authorities, sufficient to support a decree of distribution, but actual notice of the application for such decree must be given to the parties interested;[18] but it has also been held that in order for a decree of distribution to be binding upon persons claiming a share in such distribution as heirs, or otherwise, it is unnecessary for the representative to give any notice other than that of final settlement.[19]

The effect of giving the statutory notice is to charge all the world with notice of the proceedings.[20]

Removal of the representative after notice has been given and the appointment of another in his place does not destroy the efficacy of the notice.[21]

Effect of order adjudging default. Under a statute providing that, on the filing of a petition to ascertain the interest of persons in an estate being administered, the court shall direct service of notice to all persons interested to appear at a certain time and place, and shall also make an order "establishing proof of the service of said notice," and after the expiration of the time limited for appearance shall "enter an order adjudging default of all persons for not appearing, who shall not have appeared as aforesaid," an order so adjudging default, but adding that it is without prejudice to the rights of persons who have petitions for distribution therein, does not, by such additional matter, deprive the court of jurisdiction.[22]

[§ 1364] 9. Parties—a. In General. All the legatees may join in a petition for distribution,[23] or a petition for partial distribution may be presented by several legatees and distributees.[24] Necessary parties to a proceeding for distribution are in general the personal representatives of decedent,[25] the legatees or distributees,[26] or their personal rep-

[c] Notice held sufficient.—Where a distributee was given two months' notice of a motion for the distribution, and filed no exception to the scheme of settlement, and was heard by attorney, who did not verbally or in writing present any objections to the decree, an exception that the distributee had no opportunity to be heard will be overruled. [e] Notice to infants.—(1) An infant daughter of decedent must be given notice. Neal v. Robertson, 55 Ark. 79, 17 SW 587. (2) In making an order of distribution of funds derived from a sale of certain real estate belonging to a decedent's estate in the hands of a guardian, it is not necessary that notice of the application for distribution shall be served on the minors or that they shall be represented by a guardian ad litem, their representation by general guardian being sufficient unless the guardian's action is adverse in its nature to their interest. Aschan v. McDermott, 164 Iowa 750, 145 NW 524.

[f] A false recital of notice in a decree of distribution will not save it, but it is a nullity as to distributees not served with process or appearing. In re Grider, (Cal.) 21 P 532.

[g] Intervention of all parties not necessary.—If the proceedings on distribution have been regularly conducted, and the notices required by law have been given, these notices amount in law to service upon all the parties in interest, and the court may proceed to make needful orders for distribution without actual intervention of all the parties in interest. Woodward's Est., 2 Chest. Co. (Pa.) 9; Porter v. Sweeney, 61 Tex. 213.

[h] Notice to attorney-general.—A statute requiring that, when the persons entitled to a legacy or distributive share are unknown, the decree must direct that the amount be paid into the treasury of the state for the benefit of whomsoever may be entitled, to be ascertained by a proceeding in the court on notice to the attorney-general, does not require notice to the attorney-general of a reference in the surrogate's court to take proof of the rights of the claimants, by which reference it was determined that part of the next of kin of decedent were unknown and unascertainable, pursuant to which finding the money was deposited in the state treasury. Matter of Davenport, 142 App. Div. 41, 126 NYS 693.

[i] Passing account without notice.—Passing an administrator's account cannot be regarded as a final distribution of the estate by the orphans' court, where it does not appear that any meeting of the distributees was appointed, or any notice of an intended meeting given, or that a distributee whose share had been placed in bank and for which credit is claimed by the administrator had ever received it or assented to the distribution thus made. resentatives,[27] and all other persons interested in the distribution and as to whom the representative will not be protected, if a decree is rendered without their being made parties.[28]

Disability of distributees. If any of the distributees are infants they may be represented by their general guardian;[29] but in case there is no competent general guardian, or he fails to attend after notice, a guardian ad litem should be appointed to represent them.[30] An incompetent distributee for whom no guardian has been appointed cannot petition by attorney for partial distribution.[31] A petition for the distributive share of a married woman must be presented in the joint names of such married woman and her husband, and not in the name of the husband alone.[32]

Proceeding to set aside family settlement. The mother's estate and her children by a second marriage are necessary parties defendant to a bill which seeks to set aside for fraud a family settlement made between the mother and the children of the first marriage, to annul the title which apparently flowed therefrom, to avoid collaterally decrees of the Porto Rican courts concerning it, and to set aside, as simulated and fraudulent, the sales made in virtue of the title apparently vested by the settlement, where such bill, although alleging that the property transferred to the mother by such settlement was acquired by the husband by inheritance, contains no averment concerning the property allotted to the daughters which tends to rebut the legal presumption of community as to the property acquired during marriage, which the bill seeks to administer and distribute.[33]

Frazier, 41 Miss. 408; Williams v. Williams, 74 N. C. 1 (where one only of ten distributees sued the administrators without making the others parties, the court could not render a decree of distribution, and could do no more than adjudicate the rights of plaintiff and the administrators). But compare J. Elwood Lee Co. v. Grace Hospital, 206 Fed. 994 (where the amount available for legacies has been ascertained, the fact that the assets of a decedent's estate, administration of which is proceeding in a probate court, are insufficient to pay all legacies in full, does not require the other legatees to be made parties to a proceeding in a federal court against the executors for a legacy which they have refused to pay); Ward v. Oates, 42 Ala. 225 (in a proceeding for partial distribution by one of several distributees, others besides the administrator are not indispensable parties); Benoit v. statement as to the grounds upon which they claim a right to be heard.[35] So also an assignee or purchaser of a legacy or distributive share has been held to be entitled to come in by petition on final distribution and claim the assignor's legacy or share.[36] But purchasers of land of a devisee pending administration are not entitled to intervene in an application by the administrator to distribute the funds in his hands, the interests of such purchasers being subject to the administration.[37]

[§ 1366] 10. Appearance. In proceedings for an order to distribute the net residue of the estate to the sole distributee, who is a nonresident of the country, appearance may be by guardian, solicitor, or agent,[38] and the beneficiary need not personally appear for the purpose of establishing his identity as the beneficiary described in the will.[39] Where an executrix appeared and contested a petition by legatees for partial distribution in her capacity as executrix only, such appearance did not entitle her to claim rights in such proceeding which she possessed only as devisee, as to which she should be considered as having made default.[40]

[§ 1367] 11. Right to Object to Distribution. One who claims that the estate was held by decedent in trust for claimant and others, and claims under the trust a definite portion of the estate, and makes no claim that decedent confused the trust funds with his individual funds so as to render them not susceptible of identification, is not a creditor of the estate in such sense as to be entitled to object to distribution.[41] Where, on petition for the distribution of an estate, the court found on sufficient evidence that objector had no interest in the estate, he had no standing to object that the findings did not authorize the distribution of the estate to the executors as trustees, etc.[42]

[a] Written petition not essential.—Walker v. Bradbury, 15 Me. 207.

[b] An affidavit which fully states the facts, filed with a notice of a motion to require the administrator to pay a legacy, is a sufficient "petition" to authorize a citation. In re Dunscomb, 10 NYS 247.

Spray v. Bertram, 165 Ind. 13, 74 NE 502.

[d] Presentation as claim against estate.—A claim for the allowance of a legacy may be presented in the court having probate jurisdiction as a claim against the estate, but if the payment of all debts is not alleged, some reason for appealing to the court for the establishment of the legacy must be shown, and also some wrong on the part of the administrator. Fickle v. Snepp, 97 Ind. 289, 49 AmR 449.

[e] Misnumbering petition.—The fact that the clerk filed a petition for distribution under a different number from the other papers in the estate is immaterial, there being but one estate. In re Sheid, 129 Cal. 172, 61 P 920.

[f] A cross bill is unnecessary on a petition for the distribution, as it is competent for an administrator, without formality, to show cause in any intelligible manner why a decree for distribution should not be made. French v. Davis, 38 Miss. 167.

"Attention is called to a carelessness in the preparation of petitions asking for distribution. . . . Carter v. Frahm, 31 S. D. 379, 141 NW 370.

[b] Implication from prayer.—A distribution in kind may be ordered, although the prayer of the petition calls for such distribution only by implication. Hurley v. Hewett, 89 Me. 100, 35 A 1026.

49. Humphrey v. Los Angeles Protestant Episcopal Church, 154 Cal. 170, 97 P 187. But compare Burke v. Maguire, 154 Cal. 456, 98 P 21 (where a complaint against the estate of an executrix for the balance of a legacy merely alleged that there came into the possession of the executrix the sum of forty thousand dollars in money and ten thousand dollars in notes and mortgages belonging to the testator's estate, and that plaintiff did not know of or discover that the testator was the owner of such property, or that the executrix had come into possession of it, until after the payment of the legacy claimed by petitioner.[50] It is improper to include in a petition for final distribution a prayer for an accounting against one who is alleged to have come into possession of property of an estate and not to have accounted for it.[51] Any requirements of a statute [52] or rule of court [53] with respect to the application or petition should, of course, be substantially complied with. If the suit is brought by an administrator and sole distributee, an allegation that decedent died in the county where suit was brought does not give the court jurisdiction, the complaint failing to allege where decedent was domiciled at the time of his death.[54] A bill by an administrator with the will annexed for distribution according to the provisions of the will is not rendered multifarious by the joinder of legatees who were also debtors and creditors of the estate, with a prayer for a settlement of their accounts, and for a surrender by one of them of papers which he held as agent of testator.[55] An application by a legatee who is a married woman for an advance payment on her legacy must show that her husband has not sufficient means to support her.[56]

[§ 1369] (2) Description of Parties. A petition by devisees and legatees for partial distribution is not defective because it describes petitioners as "heirs at law." [57] A petition for a legacy, against the administrator of the testator, need not describe him as administrator with the will annexed, or show in what manner he became administrator, it being sufficient if it describes him as administrator.[58]

[§ 1370] (3) Joinder of Claims with Respect to Different Estates. Where estates are connected, as where one of decedents was a distributee of another, and the same person is administrator of both, distributees entitled to a portion of each of the estates may unite both claims in the same bill against the administrator.[59]

[§ 1371] (4) Filing of Petition. A statutory requirement of the filing of the petition or complaint has been held to be directory only so that a failure to file within the time prescribed by the statute does not deprive the court of jurisdiction.[60]

[§ 1372] (5) Filing Refunding Bond with Petition. A petitioner for distribution before final settlement is not required to file a refunding bond with his petition, but it is sufficient if the petition contains an offer to execute one.[61]

[§ 1373] (6) Effect of Petition as Transfer of Interest. Where three sons of testatrix mentioned in the residuary clause of her will petitioned for distribution alleging that the residue vested in them as a matter of law, and a son, who was not a residuary legatee, answered, asserting intestacy as to one fourth of the estate to which a deceased son would have been entitled had he lived, and asked that it be distributed in shares of one fifth each to the four surviving sons and to the grandson, and the latter on the same day filed a petition declaring his understanding of testatrix's intent to be that the whole residue should go to his three remaining uncles named in the residuary clause and asked that distribution be made to them, it was held that this instrument constituted an effective transfer of all the grandson's interest, and the court should have distributed the residue accordingly.[62]

[§ 1374] b. Demurrer. A demurrer to the petition will be sustained where the petition does not state facts sufficient to warrant the relief sought,[63] or where it shows that it was filed less than a year her death, and does not otherwise state conditions excusing a timely discovery of the facts, it is defective and uncertain as to the description of the property alleged to have been concealed, especially the notes and mortgages and is subject to demurrer on that ground).

50. Coulter v. Bradley, 163 Ind. 311, 71 NE 903. But compare Brown v. Glover, 158 Mo. A. 396, 138 SW 105 (a petition by a legatee to whom testator had made an advancement which the will provided should be deducted from petitioner's share, asking merely that, when distribution is ordered, petitioner's share shall be set off without charging him with the amount of the advancement, on the ground that he had paid the advancement before testator's death, but failing to allege either that there were any funds in the estate to distribute, or that the estate is in condition for distribution, was premature and unsustainable, either as a petition for distribution or a proceeding in equity).

[a] Amount of debts and nature and value of property.—Where plaintiffs alleged that the personal property amounted to "$——," and was more than sufficient to pay all the indebtedness, that certain individuals were claiming to be creditors, but that plaintiffs did not know who were creditors, the petition was sufficient under Civ. Code Prac. § 429, providing that the amount of decedent's debts and the nature and value of the property, since the failure to name the value of the personal estate by filling the blank was an oversight which defendants could have cured by motion, and the requirement regarding a statement of debts, being for the benefit of creditors, was satisfied by the allegation that the personal estate was more than sufficient to pay all indebtedness. Staton v. Byron, 105 SW 928, 32 KyL 246.

[b] Stating name of distributee.—A petition for distribution which described a minor heir as "Matilda Gravitt's child, whose name is unknown" did not comply with Rev. Code § 2222, requiring that the petition either state the name or show that the distributee has no name. Ford v. Garner, 49 Ala. 601.

[c] Averring presentation.—Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1493, requiring demands against an estate, founded upon contract, to be presented for allowance, and § 1500, providing that no action shall be maintained on any claim against an estate unless the claim is first presented, except in the case of an action brought to enforce a mortgage, a complaint against an estate sounding in contract, and not within the exception, which does not aver that the claim has been presented to the administrator fails to state a cause of action, and, where a testator willed a certain sum to certain beneficiaries of whom plaintiff was one, but there were not sufficient funds to pay the legacies in full, and on final accounting, B, the executrix, was directed to pay the sum in her hands to trustees upon their giving bonds, etc., but the trustees never qualified, and B held the funds until her death, a complaint in an action against her administrator for a share of the legacy under the distribution is founded on contract, and within the rule. Burke v. Maguire, 154 Cal. 456, 98 P 21.

[d] Use of language of statute sufficient.—A petition by legatees for the partial distribution of an estate, in the exact language of the statute, declaring "that said estate is but little indebted; and that the shares and legacies of your petitioners may now be allowed to them without loss to creditors of the estate," is sufficient as against the executor. In re Murphy, 145 Cal. 464, 78 P 960.

[e] A verification to a petition to the surrogate court to compel an executor to pay a legacy to petitioner, stating that petitioner "knows the contents thereof, and that the same are true," is a compliance with the provision of the code requiring the affidavit to state that the contents are true to the knowledge of deponent. after the grant of letters of administration;[64] but a demurrer to the whole petition will not be sustained if it is good as to any part of the relief prayed for.[65] Where, in an action brought by one of the devisees for a sale of the land of the testator and a division of the proceeds, the widow of one of the devisees who claimed the greater part of the property, and who had been in possession of the land for a number of years after the court decided that she and her children were not entitled to have their interests set apart and a homestead allowed them out of it, because the real estate had been converted into personalty by the provisions of the will, filed an amended pleading, in which she alleged that she was the widow of one of the devisees named, alleged that he left surviving him five infant children who had resided with her, that her husband had left no property or provisions for her and the children, except two horses, one cow, one wagon, and some household goods not worth exceeding two hundred dollars, and a part interest in a legacy, and asked that seven hundred and thirty dollars be set aside out of the legacy to supply the deficiency in the property on hand at the death of her husband, a demurrer to the item of seven hundred and thirty dollars was properly sustained, as it was impossible to determine the amount she was entitled to, the value of the household goods not being alleged.[66]

[§ 1375] c. Waiver of Formal Objections to Petition. Where an administrator filed a petition asking distribution of the entire estate to himself, but on the hearing stipulated with the other claimants that the matter should be submitted to the court on an agreed statement of facts, he thereby waived the filing of formal written objections to his petition.[67]

[§ 1376] d. Plea or Answer. An answer or plea may be filed to the petition setting up a denial or substantial defense to the facts stated therein.[68] If a lack of jurisdiction of the court to act upon the petition is relied on, facts showing such lack of jurisdiction must be alleged in the answer,[69] and it has been held that an opposition to distribution must state that there is an unsatisfied liability of a certain and definite amount or nature.[70] A plea or answer merely alleging that the representative does not know who the heirs are is insufficient,[71] and it has been held that in order to justify the dismissal of a petition for a legacy or distributive share, the answer must be duly verified, must set forth facts which cast a doubt on the petitioner's claim and must deny the validity and legality of the claim.[72] In a suit to compel an executor to pay a legacy, an answer setting up that plaintiff's ward was not entitled to a legacy from her grandfather's estate which was left to her father, who died before the grandfather, because of the father's indebtedness to the grandfather, is in the nature of a plea in confession and avoidance, and admits the right to the legacy except for the defense.[73]

[§ 1377] e. Reply. A reply may be filed to the answer or plea.[74]

[§ 1378] 13. Issues. Only the issues made by the pleadings are to be tried.[75] The probate court has no power to determine claims of third persons against the distributees.[76] On the trial in that court of the claim of an assignee of the widow for her distributive share in the estate, the administrator cannot attack the consideration for the assignment.[77] Questions of title to the property[78] or the validity of claims in the representative's hands as assets of the estate[79] are not proper for consideration in distribution proceedings. Neither is it proper to consider claims between the executor and a devisee arising out of a partnership between them.[80] In a proceeding for partial distribution, the question whether all the property, or only the separate property of decedent, was embraced in an agreement between the widow and the heirs for a distribution of the estate is not properly before the court.[81] A statute authorizing contests arising out of the community property in a proceeding for distribution has been held to apply only to cases of intestacy.[82]

[§ 1379] 14. Evidence. In a suit to recover a legacy to a legatee who was a subject of a foreign country and resided in that country at her death, it will not be presumed that there are creditors of the foreign legatee in the state where such writ is brought.[83] Where commissioners appointed by a court under a power in a will to value the property, to determine whether a daughter's share was materially less than that of a son, were empowered by the court, not only to value, but also to divide, the estate, their division, setting aside a part of the residuary estate to the daughter, without objection by the executors, must be presumed to have been adopted by them and made their act.[84] In a proceeding by a legatee or distributee for his legacy or distributive share the burden is on him to prove his title and all other facts necessary to entitle him to recover,[85] unless such proof is waived;[86] and, conversely, the burden is on the representative to prove payment, settlement, or any other matter of defense relied upon by him.[87] The representative may introduce evidence only as to such matters as he has set up as a defense.[88] The general rules of evidence[89] are to be applied in determining the admissibility of evidence which is offered,[90] and the weight and sufficiency of that which is admitted.[91]

[b] Right to nominate.—The statute does not contemplate "that when one opposes the right of another to participate in a distribution, he shall have the power to nominate an auditor of his own choosing by a mere assertion to the court that the other was not legally entitled to share in the same." Best's Est., 19 Pa. Dist. 337, 338.

[a] Adoption by executors of division by commissioners.—Where commissioners appointed by a court under a power in the will to value the property, to determine whether a daughter's share was materially less than that of a son, were empowered by the court, not only to value but also to divide the estate, their division, setting aside a part of the residuary estate to the daughter, without objection by the executors, must be presumed to have been adopted by them and made their act. Whitfield v. Miles, 101 Miss. 734, 58 S 8.

[b] Effect of distribution by auditor.—A distribution by an auditor of funds in the hands of an administrator, confirmed by court, was conclusive only as to the fund he was appointed to distribute, and an attempt to make an award out of the proceeds of real estate not sold was beyond his power. In re Grothe, 237 Pa. 262, 85 A 141.

[c] The failure of an auditor further to distribute a trust fund among those legally entitled thereto was not error, although he could properly have done so, where the award did not conclude or prejudice any one having a standing to dispute a claim upon the fund. In re Kelley, 250 Pa. 172, 95 A 400.

[a] Who may except.—(1) An executor, who is an active trustee of an estate created under a will, is authorized to file exceptions to the report of the auditor distributing the estate. Frymeyer's Est., 17 LancL Rev (Pa.) 401. (2) Any one to whom an equal share in a decedent's estate has been awarded on a distribution thereof by an auditor in the orphans' court has a right, being interested in the amount of the fund, to except to the findings of the auditor and to have his exceptions considered by

tion by the probate court that a final order to deliver up the property can be made.[4] Findings of fact made by the auditor are conclusive where clear error is not apparent,[5] but a mistake in their report may be corrected by the court and relief granted accordingly.[6] Where distribution of a decedent's estate has been made promptly at the end of the year from the death of decedent by an auditor among collateral kin, and shortly thereafter a child who was born in a distant state where he always resided appears as the heir, and by his guardian demands that the confirmation of the auditor's report is set aside and the discharge of the administrator and his bondsman be revoked, and an agreement is made among the parties to this effect, and to recommit the question of distribution to the auditor, the administrator cannot complain of a decree directly against him, before every available remedy has been exhausted against the collateral kin among whom the estate had been distributed.[7]

[§ 1381] 16. Examination and Settlement of Accounts. On a petition for distribution of all the assets, a settlement of the representative's entire accounts may be ordered and needful corrections made,[8] and it has been held error to make a decree for distribution without ordering an account of the amount, character, and condition of the estate in the representative's hands.[9] But in the absence of statute permitting this, the probate court may not fix the value of property for the purpose of distribution,[10] and it is irregular in the distribution proceeding to surcharge the representative with interest thereby increasing the balance against him beyond that indicated by the accounts as confirmed.[11] Persons, who have no right to inherit the property which they claim, cannot inquire into the methods followed in settling the succession.[12]

Waiver of account. Where, after a will had been duly probated, the executrix, both by assignment and under the will, acquired the right to have the entire residue distributed to her absolutely, and, after the time for filing claims had expired, she filed a petition for distribution containing a detailed description of all the property of the estate, and alleging that she had filed no accounts, as executrix, because she was entitled to have the whole of the residue distributed to her, such statement constituted a waiver of an account, and it was therefore proper for the court, after due notice to direct distribution without requiring the executrix to file an account.[13]

[§ 1382] 17. Appraisal of Estate. Where it is necessary to a just and equitable distribution,[14] distributers appointed by the probate court may revalue the property to be distributed,[15] or appraisers may be appointed for that purpose on petition of the representative.[16] The mode of such appraisement must be strictly in accordance with the terms of the statute giving the probate court power to order it,[17] and the appraisal may be set aside for gross mistake by the appraisers in calculating the value of certain parts of the estate, although no actual misconduct or fraud is imputed to them.[18]

[§ 1383] 18. Hearing and Determination—a. In General. Before issuing an order of distribution the court should hear and determine all questions relating to the rights of the parties;[19] and as incidental thereto, may in general exercise all powers and decide all questions necessary to a correct distribution of the estate.[20] It should in general ascertain and declare what is to be dis-

the court. Bracken's Est., 138 Pa. 104, 22 A 20. (3) The informant in escheat proceedings has no right to except where the representative of the commonwealth is satisfied by the conclusion of the auditing judge that there has been no escheat. Burns' Est., 11 Pa. Dist. 363.

[a] Thus a surrogate has jurisdiction: (1) To determine whether money belonging to the estate has been used by the executor to purchase real property. Kager v. Brenneman, 47 App. Div. 63, 62 NYS 339. (2) To decide as to the validity of a trust where a distribution of the estate cannot be had without such determination. Matter of George, 3 NYS 426, 1 Conn. (3) To determine whether an advancement required by the will to be charged against a legatee had been paid before testator's death, and was therefore not chargeable against the legatee as a part of his share of the estate. Brown v. Glover, 158 Mo. A. 396, 138 SW 105.

[b] Ordering distribution subject to conflicting claims.—Where the opposition of a creditor of a distributee charged that an assignment of a distributive share of proceeds of a sale directed by a will was to defraud creditors, it was proper for the court not to decide that question but to order the distribution subject to the conflicting claims and to allow the parties to determine their rights in a proper action for that purpose. In re Gamble, 166 Cal. 253, 135 P 970.

[c] On the other hand it has been held: (1) That the probate court has no power to determine whether an alleged settlement between an executor and residuary legatee is valid. Hanscom v. Marston, 82 Me. 288, 19 A 460. (2) That the ordinary is not authorized to decide difficult questions. Cook v. Weaver, 77 Ga. 9. (3) That the county court has only power to order the payment of a distributive share or legacy readily ascertained by simple calculation, without complication or plausible dispute, and without issue or litigation. Bowers v. Lester, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 456. (4) That the orphans' court in proceedings for an order directing the executor to distribute the net residue of the estate to the sole distributee may not inquire into the merits of claims disputed by the sole distributee. Clark v. Sandrock, 113 Md. 422, 77 A 644. (7) So that in proceedings for a special accounting of an executor and to enforce payment of a legacy, the surrogate has jurisdiction only where the right to the legacy is undisputed. Riggs v. [a] Contest of right.—(1) The personal representative is entitled on proceedings for distribution to contest the title of any one who claims an interest in the final distribution of the estate. Watson v. May, 8 Ala. 177; Babin v. D'Astugue, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 615 (although the executor's term has expired, he has the right to contest the claims of persons pretending to be the legal heirs). (2) But he cannot contest the claim of one heir against another in a contest between the heirs to determine to whom distribution should be made, to which proceeding he is made a formal party. Roach v. Coffey, 73 Cal. 281, 14 P 840. (3) Nor can he contest the rights of legatees under the will upon a rule upon the commissioner to show cause why he has not turned over money to one of them. Key v. Griffin, 18 S. C. Eq. 67.

[b] Assignments or pledges not considered.—The probate court, in making orders of distribution of an estate, does not concern itself with assignments or pledges of distributive shares, or with the enforcement of equitable liens thereon, but such questions must be determined in a court of equity. Coram v. Davis, 209 Mass. 229, 95 NE 298.

[c] The right of a grantee of an heir, devisee, or legatee cannot be determined upon a proceeding for partial distribution, but the distribution should be suspended until his rights are determined on final distribution or in some other appropriate proceeding. In re Foley, 24 Nev. 197, 291, 51 P 834, 52 P 649, 1134, 53 P 8.

[d] Legatee of first testator.—The power conferred upon the surrogate's court to compel an executor of a deceased executor to account for unadministered assets of the first estate in his hands and to pay and deliver the same to the surrogate's court, or to his successor in office, or to "such other person as is authorized by law to receive the same" does not require the surrogate to direct payment or delivery to a legatee under the will of the first testator. In re Moehring, 154 N. Y. 423, 48 NE 818.

[e] The usual and better course is to confirm the account, stating the balance subject to distribution, and ascertain the distributees, if a matter of doubt, by a proceeding at law. Purviance v. Com., 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 31.

[f] Pendency of a petition in the proceeding in the nature of an action to determine the heirship does not justify denial of the petition for final distribution, where the claim could have as readily been determined in the proceedings for distribution. In re Ross, (Cal.) 182 P 755.

[g] The validity of a bequest cannot be determined by the probate court, but only by a court of law or equity. State v. Warren, 28 Md. 338.

[h] Where no fund for distribution exists, the court should not hear and determine the claims of distributees. Snyder's Est., 15 Pa. Co. 253.

[i] On the other hand, a general order of distribution exhausts the power of the court, and it has no power to determine the persons to whom distribution is to be made and the amount going to each. Cadiz First Nat. Bank v. Beebe, 62 Oh. St. 41, 56 NE 485. See also Hanscom v. Marston, 82 Me. 28, 19 A 460 (the probate court has no power to determine who takes the residuum of an estate under a will).

and in order to do so the court may hear evidence,[24] and, where this is necessary, construe the will[25] or, with some qualification, other instruments bearing on such questions.[26] Where a trustee under a will claims that the securities which the executors intend to turn over are, even if authorized, insufficient, the court should, before directing the investments to be turned over, inquire into and determine their sufficiency as investments of the trust funds.[27] Where, on the application of heirs, an administratrix was required to account for certain notes as part of the estate, and the court found that the notes belonged to the administratrix individually, pending the disposition of an appeal therefrom, it was proper to deny an application for a final report and distribution.[28] The court, on petition of distributees and over the objection of creditors, will not arrest the course of administration, charge the assets with a lien for unpaid debts, legacies, and expenses, discharge the administrator, and direct distribution, where the money necessary to pay debts, legacies, and expenses of administration is not proffered in court, and the only offer to pay the same is "on the decree of distribution being granted," and not as a condition thereof.[29] Where a company sought to have the distribution of part of an estate made to it under a deed absolute in form, and it was established that its claim was false and its deed simply a mortgage, it was improper, in a decree distributing such interest to another, apparently to recognize the company's rights by making the distribution subject to any rights which the company might have by way of any mortgage.[30] The court can only determine the respective interests of the parties in such title as decedent had at his death, and cannot adjudicate equities between devisees and persons acquiring rights in the property during decedent's lifetime, and hence can-

[d] Where rights determined by suit in equity.—Where, in a suit in equity, the rights of the parties are determined under a contract for the distribution of the estate between the heirs, on a final settlement the probate court must make a decree of distribution in accordance with the views of the court of equity. Crockett v. Sibley, 73 N. H. 322, 61 A 469.

[a] Extent of construction.—(1) The orphans' court, in fixing the decree of distribution by executors, has power to construe the will so far as necessary to determine to whom the distribution or payment is to be made. Hill v. Bloom, 41 N. J. Eq. 276, 7 A 438. (2) The probate court may determine the validity of a bequest only so far as is necessary on a controversy clearly within its statutory jurisdiction; and it may grant distribution on the ground of intestacy resulting from an invalid bequest only when the invalidity is plainly apparent on the fact of the bequest. Mack's App., 71 Conn. 122, 41 A 242.

[b] The orphans' court has authority to construe a will only on special proceedings instituted on the application of some party in interest, bringing every person interested into court; and a decree directing an administrator with the will annexed to distribute money according to the terms of a will is not a decree construing the will. [e] Where a will purported to create a trust of the residue of testator's property after the termination of the widow's life estate, it was incumbent upon the court on final distribution to determine whether the trust was valid and to declare the terms thereof, and to select the trustees and make distribution to them, as well as determine what other persons had rights in the distributable property of the estate and the nature of their interest. Luscomb v. Fintzelberg, 162 Cal. 433, 123 P 247.

not deprive a lessee from decedent of her rights under the lease, although the lessee is executrix under the will, and as such a party to the probate proceedings.[31] The pendency of appeals, one from parts of an order settling the administrator's account, and the other by a claimant whose claim was denied, does not warrant the denial of the petition for final distribution, even though the court might properly, in the exercise of its discretion, have continued hearings in the proceedings for distribution pending determination of the appeals.[32]

[§ 1384] b. Advancements to, and Indebtedness of, Legatee or Distributee. In determining the amount of a distributive share, the probate court may settle all questions of advancements,[33] and in some jurisdictions may inquire into and determine the indebtedness of the distributee to the estate and order a deduction of the same from his share.[34] But the probate court cannot adjudge that a distributee is indebted to the estate in excess of his share therein,[35] nor can it consider questions as to the validity or extent of the indebtedness of a legatee or distributee to the representative personally,[36] or to third persons.[37]

[§ 1385] c. Power to Decree Distribution to Assignee. In some jurisdictions the probate court has power, in ordering distribution, to decree the share of a legatee or distributee to his assignee;[38] but in other jurisdictions this power is denied,[39] except where the assignment is undisputed,[40] and the legatee or distributee consents to payment to the assignee.[41]

[§ 1386] d. Findings. In proceedings for an order for payment of a legacy, a finding that testator did not intend to give anything to plaintiff is not merely a conclusion of fact derived from facts previously found, but a finding of testator's intent, the ultimate fact in issue.[42] The fact that, in proceedings for distribution to which decedent's widow was a party, decedent's sisters alleged that the estate was interested in certain property held by decedent and his wife as tenants in common, has been held not to require a finding on that question, since the ultimate fact for the court's determination was the value of the estate.[43] If no error was committed prejudicial to appellants from an order affirming the probate court's distribution of a decedent's estate, the question of decedent's domicile is settled by the court's finding.[44]

shows the payment of income for taxes and other expenses, the petition must be dismissed.[47] A petition filed in the names of the widow and other distributees cannot be dismissed on the motion of the widow alone.[48] The fact that the assets of a decedent's estate, administration of which is pending in the probate court, are insufficient to pay all legacies in full affords no reason for a federal court dismissing, or declining to proceed on, a petition against the executors on a claim for a legacy which they have refused to pay, where the amount available for legacies has been ascertained.[49] It has been held that, although the court would be authorized to dismiss a petition for distributive shares of intestate's estate, where such petition contained jurisdictional facts necessary to compel the filing of an account, the matter would be disposed of accordingly, more than a year having elapsed since the grant of letters, and no notice having been given to creditors.[50]

[§ 1388] 19. New Trial. The parties opposing the granting of a decree of distribution may make a motion for a new trial where the decree directs the distribution.[51] Where a petitioner for final distribution alleged that the only heirs of deceased were herself and certain children of a deceased half-brother of deceased, and subsequently two other petitions were filed in which the petitioners alleged that they were entitled to the estate, but not denying in terms any allegation of the first petitioner, and the court held against the original petitioner, an issue of fact was made and determined so that a motion for a new trial was authorized.[52]

[§ 1389] 20. Order or Decree for Distribution —a. Vt.—Ex p. Robinson, 1 D. Chipm. 357.

[a] Where an administrator who is also the husband of one of the distributees is sued by the distributees for the estate left in his hands, his wife's share should be deducted from the aggregate, and the decree in favor of the others should be for the balance only. Singleton v. Singleton, 5 Dana (Ky.) 87.

[b] Construction of decree.—A final decree finding certain heirs owners in fee "of all the real property hereinbefore described, and of all the real property of which the said testator died seised, whether the same is described in the inventory herein or not," was not intended to cover the homestead, but only the property described, and such property as might perhaps have been unintentionally omitted from the inventory. Fraser v. Farmers', etc., Sav. Bank, 89 Minn. 482, 95 NW 307.

[c] Where an equal division cannot be made, a decree cannot be rendered and execution awarded against those receiving more than their share, in favor of the others, for the balance. Teat v. Lee, 8 Port. (Ala.) 507.

[d] The decree should direct payment by the administrator individually and not as administrator. Matter of Monell, 28 Misc. 308, 59 NYS 981, 1 Mills Surr. 147.

[e] Provision for deduction of inheritance tax.—(1) Where the decree of distribution of an estate fixes the amount "less the amount of the inheritance tax as required by law," but does not fix the amount of such tax, nor expressly adjudicate that any tax should be deducted, the distributees who are not within the collateral inheritance tax law are entitled to the entire estate without any deduction under the decree. Wirringer v. Morgan, 12 Cal. A. 26, 106 P 425. (2) Where the unpaid legacies and claims against the succession are known, and the only dispute is over the proper amount to allow inheritance taxes and fees, the court should order the executors to retain an amount sufficient to pay the claims as made and the legacies and the highest possible amount that may be due for taxes, and then put the heirs in possession of the remainder of the property. Burbank's Succ., 126 La. 9, 52 S 175.

[f] Failure to take collateral in- a positive and conclusive disposition[58] of all the property or assets among all the parties entitled thereto.[59] Where land is to be divided, it should be described or designated by the decree sufficiently for identification.[60] The decree must of course conform to the will of the testator,[61] or, in case of intestacy, to the statute of descent.[62] Where the orders or decrees in a partial distribution were wholly unauthorized and void, final distribution should be decreed as though no partial distribution had ever been made,[63] and where the validity of a conveyance by an heir is disputed, distribution should be decreed as though no such conveyance had been made.[64] Where the interest of a legatee has been attached, it is proper to stay payment of his share until the action against him has been determined.[65] Where a will vests the title in fee in testatrix's children, subject to a trust, and to the possession of the trustees for the trust period, the decree of distribution in the matter of the estate should distribute such title in fee, subject to said trust, to the children.[66] Where testatrix bequeathed a pecuniary legacy to a certain person for life, and, after her death, to her daughters who should then be alive, or, if any were dead leaving issue, to such issue, the children taking the share of the parent, the court on distribution should make such orders and decrees as are necessary for the preservation of the principal of the fund and the payment of the income only to the legatee during her life.[67] A minute order made by the court in proceedings to distribute an estate, stating that the court was of the opinion that half of the estate, subject to testamentary distribution and to the court's jurisdiction, should be equally divided among decedent's children, and ordering that a decree of final distribution be prepared accordingly, has been held not intended as a decree of distribution.[68] A decree ordering an executor to pay over a certain amount of money in his hands as executor cannot make such sum a lien on real estate and give complainant execution therefor, when the prayer of the bill does not ask for such lien or execution.[69]

[§ 1390] b. Decree Based on Presumption of Death. A decree for distribution upon the presumption of the death of an ancestor arising from his absence should include an adjudication on the effect of such absence and should rest the order of distribution thereon.[70]

[§ 1391] c. Entry of Decree. The decree of heritance tax into account.—An order for distribution of an estate is not erroneous as failing to take into account the collateral inheritance tax, since, theoretically, such tax must come from the distributee of the estate and out of his share, and the administrator is required to withhold the amount thereof. In re Carroll, 149 Iowa 617, 128 NW 929.

[g] Anticipatory payments.—Where all parties interested in a fund appear, an executor or trustee may receive directions for anticipatory payments, but not so where there is a contingency as to the person or persons who may be entitled to the fund. Wadsworth v. Baldwin, 79 N. J. Eq. 274, 82 A 326.

[h] Return of deeds to land.—Where two brothers interested in equal parts with other brothers and sisters in their father's estate deeded their interest in the property to a third brother, and, after the death of the third brother, induced his widow to return the deeds to them, the deeds not having been recorded, the consideration for one of them not having been paid, and the consideration for the other being returned to the widow, in an action by another brother and sister for the sale of the land and the division of the proceeds, the two brothers who deeded their interest should not have been relieved from their contract of sale, the deeds by them being sufficient, but that the court should have decreed that the consideration for such deeds should be paid them out of the amount of the proceeds which descended to the deceased brother who had purchased their interest. Porter v. Porter, 135 Ky. 813, 123 SW 302.

[a] A decree of distribution should not be made contingent upon the future establishment of conditions inserted in a proviso. In re Garrity, 108 Cal. 463, 38 P 628, 41 P 485.

[b] Reference to will.—Where the decree of distribution of the estate of a testator omitted a clause in the will as to a devise over, but by reference to the will embodied the entire will in it, the omission was of no consequence. In re Blake, 157 Cal. 448, 108 P 287.

[b] A decree is not final, unless it makes distribution of all the assets found to be in the hands of the executor or administrator among all the parties who appear by the record to be interested in the estate. Hollis v. Caughman, 22 Ala. 478.

[c] Distribution directly to distributees.—Where an administrator did not question the court's authority to discharge him from all other liability in connection with the estate, except as to certain specified claims which he was then prosecuting, exclusive of the estate's interest in a trust fund, and he was so discharged by consent of all parties in interest, he was not entitled to have the estate's interest in the trust fund thereafter paid over to him for distribution among the distributees, etc., but the court properly directed distribution to them direct. Routledge v. Elmendorf, 54 Tex. Civ. A. 174, 116 SW 156.

[d] Provision for commissions, expenses, and future disbursements.—In an accounting by an administratrix, the court should provide for the payment of commissions, expenses, and all necessary future disbursements, and so should not order a balance of cash to be distributed until the final winding up of the estate. [b] Absolute accuracy not essential.—The description is not required to be so specific that the land can be identified without the aid of extrinsic evidence, nor is it material that the description is false in part, if what remains is sufficient for the purpose of identification. distribution should be entered on the record in the prescribed manner.[71]

[§ 1392] d. Setting Aside, Correcting, and Modifying—(1) Power of Court—(a) In General. Ordinarily the probate court has entire control of its decrees until the end of the term at which they are entered, and during that term may, for sufficient cause, set aside, amend, or modify a decree of distribution,[72] although property has been distributed in pursuance of it,[73] and the distributees have given receipts reciting that the property has been delivered in compliance with the order and is received in satisfaction thereof.[74] After the end of the term, however, the only remedy is usually by appeal,[75] except where the decree was rendered through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or fraud,[76] in which case, according to the weight of authority, upon a proper application or motion by some person interested,[77] and upon due notice to all in-death is presumed from the absence, it is necessary to treat the entire opinion as part of the decree, it appearing that no harm can come therefrom).

[b] Order cannot be set aside in vacation.—Where the district court, sitting in probate, had jurisdiction of the subject matter and parties when it passed an order directing distribution of the proceeds of a sale of certain land of decedent's estate, the order directing such distribution was possessed of all of the attributes of a judgment, and was binding on all parties affected by it over whom the court had jurisdiction, and could not be thereafter set aside by an order of the judge in vacation on the ground that he had been misled as to the heirship of one of the parties when he made the order. [d] Extrinsic character of fraud or mistake.—A decree of distribution will not be set aside unless fraud or mistake on account of which relief is prayed is extrinsic or collateral to matter which was tried by court. McGavin v. San Francisco Protestant Orphan Asylum Soc., 34 Cal. A. 168, 167 P 182.

[e] Nature of fraud.—Fraud of the executrix, relied on as a ground for setting aside a decree of distribution, must relate to preventing claimant from appearing and setting up her claim. Davis v. Seavey, 95 Wash. 57, 163 P 35, AnnCas1918D 314.

[g] Negligence of persons interested.—In the absence of fraud, a decree of distribution will not be set aside because by mistake of the executor's attorney alone it provides for payment of a charitable bequest, contrary to a statute making such a bequest void where testator dies within thirty days of making will, the parties interested knowing that the bequest is void, but negligently failing to follow the proceedings and object to the decree. [b] Motion to vacate the proper remedy.—A party aggrieved by the alleged fraudulent acts of an administrator, whereby an order of court was made distributing an estate among parties not entitled thereto, should seek his redress by first petitioning the court to vacate such order of distribution; and in such a proceeding it is proper to make the beneficiaries under the fraudulent administration defendants. Leavens' Est., 65 Wis. 440, 27 NW 324.

[c] Amendment for benefit of newly discovered distributees.—The surrogate has power to amend or modify a decree of distribution for the benefit of newly discovered distributees who were not parties to the original proceedings. Lawyers' Surety Co. v. Reinach, 25 Misc. 150, 54 NYS 205 [aff 23 Misc. 242, 51 NYS 162].

[d] Proceedings. — The orphans' court may set aside, amend, or modify such a decree upon a simple petition, or it may treat such petition as in effect and substance a bill of review. Keyser's Est., 6 Pa. Dist. 181, 19 Pa. Co. 364.

[e] Circumstances under which relief denied.—One of the next of kin sued the surety on the administrator's bond to recover her distributive share, as established by a decree settling the administrator's account, and the surety, who was not cited on the accounting, applied to open the decree, claiming that the administrator had conveyed certain real estate to the distributee, and that she had given a receipt in satisfaction of her share in the estate, and a waiver of citation in the settlement of his account before a proceeding to call him to account which resulted in the decree in question. It appeared that the conveyance was as security for such share and that after giving the receipt the administrator filed his account, showing an amount for distribution corresponding with the decree entered. Where no collusion between the administrator and the distributee was alleged, and there was no allegation that the whole of the share in question had been paid, and the administrator has no property from which any part of the amount awarded can be collected, the application to open the decree would be denied. Matter of Haight, 50 Misc. 238, 100 NYS 488, 5 Mills Surr. 376.

[f] Mistake of law not sufficient.—Where all interested in a decree of distribution are represented by attorneys at the hearing, and the decree was by consent of all, one interested cannot thereafter have it reopened because of his attorney's mistake in the law governing distribution. Matter of Schlosser, 63 Misc. 163, 116 NYS 794 [aff 136 App. Div. 898 mem, 120 NYS 1145 mem].

[g] Where a guaranty of collection and distribution is given by the executor to legatees upon distribution of assets in kind to them, and a final accounting is had and decree entered, resort must be had, if the assets are insufficient, to the guaranty and not to opening the decree. [a] Mistake alone sufficient.—Relief may be given in equity against a decree of distribution which was the result of a mistake, unmixed with fraud, and not the result of the negligence of the injured party. Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 89 P 317.

[b] Alien distributees may maintain a bill in equity in the federal court to set aside a decree of distribution of the probate court procured by fraud in this country. Sullivan v. Andoe, 6 Fed. 641, 4 Hughes 290.

[c] Misjoinder of parties.—Where executors distributed the residuum of the estate among the legatees, and thereafter it was discovered that securities assigned certain legatees were forgeries, and such legatees filed a bill in equity for a reapportionment, there was no misjoinder of parties complainant, since the distribution was a single transaction affecting all parties. Maldaner v. Beurhaus, 108 Wis. 25, 84 NW 25.

[d] Circumstances not amounting to fraud.—Where a woman who has cohabited with decedent for thirty years and been recognized by him as his wife, and the five sons whom she has borne him and whom decedent has recognized as such, prosecute their claim to his property and fail to disclose that there was no legal marriage, this does not constitute such a fraud on the orphans' court as will render void a decree of distribution in their favor. Rice v. Braden, 243 Pa. 141, 89 A 877.

of commissioners to make partition cannot be amended, except upon rehearing or bill of review.[82] Where the orphans' court enters a final decree of adjudication and distribution, and in a different proceeding enters a final decree in escheat, it cannot, subsequently at the instance of relatives of decedent, open the decree of distribution and order restitution of money by the state without having previously vacated the final decree of escheat.[83]

[§ 1393] (b) Upon Discovery of New Assets. Where some property has not been administered in probate proceedings and the fact is not discovered until a final decree of distribution has been entered, the final decree should not, for this reason, be set aside on the application of a creditor or party interested, but the proper remedy is under the statute providing for the subsequent issue of letters testamentary whenever other property is discovered.[84]

[§ 1394] (2) Time for Application. An application or petition to set aside or amend a decree of distribution may be barred by lapse of the time, if any, prescribed by statute,[85] or in equity by laches.[86]

[§ 1395] (3) Parties to Application. The persons to whom an estate has been distributed under an order of distribution are proper parties to proceedings to set such order aside,[87] even though the court has no power to order such parties to make restitution.[88] Persons having no interest or rights under the order of distribution are not proper parties to the application.[89]

[§ 1396] (4) Mode and Form of Application. It has been held that a petition to set aside a decree of distribution must allege fraud and that the money sought to be recovered has not been paid out to the distributees mentioned in the decree,[90] and that in order to set aside or vacate a final decree of distribution on ground of mistake, it is necessary to bring an action directly for that purpose.[91] A new petition by an administrator for an order of distribution in which he sets forth the undisputed facts in regard to the persons entitled to distributive shares and the amount to be distributed, and which differs entirely from the former petition and decree, must be regarded as containing by necessary implication so clear a prayer for the revocation of the previous decree as to have the effect of such an application.[92] Where the complaint, in an action to set aside a decree of distribution, alleges appointment of the administrator and rendition of the decree, it will be presumed that the petition for the administrator's appointment alleged the proper jurisdictional facts.[93]

[§ 1398] (6) Amended Decree. A decree of distribution, made to correct a former decree, in which, through mistake, certain heirs of testator, who as such were entitled to a share of his estate, were not named, properly provided for the protection of the administrator in reference to payments made under the first decree, and that the new decree should take effect only to establish the rights of the persons omitted to their distributive shares in the estate.[95]

[§ 1399] (7) Rights of Third Persons. In order to set aside a final decree of the probate court, assigning real property to the heirs on the ground

[b] Lapse of time not raising bar.—An administratrix was served with notice of a claim within six months after the granting of letters, but did not reject it, and no proceedings were taken to have the claim passed upon under the statute, but a distribution of the estate was made, in which there was no mention of the claim, the administratrix alleging on oath that her daughter, an infant, was the only creditor. The claimant had no notice of the proceedings, but began an action at law against the administratrix for the payment of his claim, which she contested for over five years, and which finally resulted in a judgment in claimant's favor. In the meantime the administratrix had exhausted the estate. It was held that a proceeding by the creditor to procure a modification of the decree of distribution, brought eight years and one month after the grant of administration, was not barred by limitations. [a] Illustration.—It appeared that the next of kin of a son, who were also next of kin of his father, who died in 1896, leaving no estate and no debts, on final acounting made no mention of an illegitimate son of the father, and the estate was divided between the next of kin without administration on the estate of the father. Such illegitimate son had obtained an assignment of the father's share of the deceased's sons estate several months before the father's death, and left a will making his wife sole legatee and executrix, and in 1900 the decree of distribution on the son's estate was opened to let in parties for a hearing. In 1902 letters of administration were granted the wife on the father's estate, but an application to turn over the whole estate to her was refused. The son, whose estate was being administered, had disappeared in 1889 under circumstances showing an intent to commit suicide. It was held that the wife had no rights as executrix in the proceeding to open the decree of distribution, her testator not being properly a party to the accounting in 1898 and the validity of the assignment of his father's interest in the son's estate being questioned. Matter of Losee, 46 Misc. 363, 94 NYS 1082, 4 Mills Surr. 483 [aff 104 NYS 1132 mem] (holding that a decree opening proceedings in the son's estate not having been made until after the death of his father, neither his representatives nor assignees had any standing in court).

Braden, 243 Pa. 141, 89 A 877. (3) All creditors and others who had an opportunity to be heard. Tinker v. Babcock, 204 Ill. 571, 68 NE 445 [aff 107 Ill. A. 78]. (4) All parties interested as to everything necessarily involved in it. Eddy v. Kelly, 72 Minn. 32, 74 NW 1020. (5) All persons interested whether then in being or not. Ladd v. Weiskopf, 62 Minn. 29, 64 NW 99, 69 LRA 785. (6) Each party to the special proceeding who was duly cited. Matter of Halsted, 41 Misc. 606, 85 NYS 301, 4 Mills Surr. 102. (7) A distributee residing out of the state, but within the United States, properly made a party to the proceedings for distribution and duly notified in the manner prescribed by statute of the pendency and object of the proceedings, is concluded by the decree for distribution, unless he petitions for a rehearing within two years, although the decree excludes him altogether from a share of the estate to which he was entitled and although he had no actual notice of the pendency of the suit. Hurt v. Hurt, 27 S. C. Eq. 114.

[b] The order or decree is conclusive as to: (1) The construction of the will. In re Fitzgerald, 161 Cal. 319, 119 P 96, 49 LRANS 615. (2) The fund, items, and matters covered by and properly included therein. In re Evans, 42 Utah 282, 130 P 217, 22 Utah 366, 62 P 913, 83 AmSR 794, 53 LRA 952. (3) The amount of assets in the hands of the representative for distribution. Judge Limestone County Ct. v. Coulter, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 348; In re Snyder, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 302; Matter of Monell, 28 Misc. 308, 59 NYS 981, 1 Mills Surr. 147; McFarland's Est., 1 Phila. (Pa.) 378. (4) The absence of an heir. Lenehan v. Spaulding, 57 Vt. 115. (5) The amount of each share. Cousins v. Jackson, 49 Ala. 236; Probate Judge v. Robins, 5 N. H. 246; Sayre v. Sayre, 16 N. J. Eq. 505; Burd v. McGregor, 2 Grant (Pa.) 353. (6) The party entitled to receive each share. Sayre v. Sayre, 16 N. J. Eq. 505. (7) The state's right to an escheat. In re McClellan, 31 S. D. 641, 141 NW 965. (8) A decree of distribution that the estate of testator be decreed to his widow in fee, rendered on the petition of the executors, conclusively adjudges that the widow takes the estate freed from any trust in favor of an executor claimed to have been created by the will. Wills v. Wills, 166 Cal. 529, 137 P 249.

[c] That all the distributees are living is incidentally but not conclusively determined by the decree of distribution; and the contrary may be set up elsewhere. Eans v. Sawyer, 27 Tex. 448 [foll Sawyer v. Boyle, 21 Tex. 28].

[d] Approval of settlement in another court. — An order discharging an administratrix, and approving a settlement made by her in an action in another court, whereby she acquired the interest of another legatee, concludes the validity of the settlement and precludes legatees who were parties to the administration from attacking it. In re Goss, 73 Wash. 330, 132 P 409.

[e] A purchaser claiming title from an heir under a decree of dis-

sons interested who received no notice of the proceedings and had no opportunity to be heard therein,[1] or upon one who claims adversely to the estate,[2] or where it makes a distribution unauthorized by law.[3] A decree on the first account of an executor is, as to residuary legatees, conclusive only as to the fund then being distributed,[4] and does not determine that all subsequent distributions must be made upon the same theory.[5] A decree distributing the estate of a testator is not conclusive against the right of an adopted child of the testator to enforce an oral agreement whereby the testator was to make him his heir.[6]

As muniment of title. The order or decree is a muniment of title of the highest value,[7] and operates to vest in each distributee an absolute right and title to the property assigned to him,[8] subject to any outstanding title in the hands of a third tribution is chargeable with notice of everything appearing on the face of the judgment roll in the probate proceeding, and is not an innocent purchaser without notice of want of jurisdiction of the county court to appoint an administrator and to order a distribution as against heirs not appearing. Carter v. Frahm, 31 S. D. 379, 141 NW 370.

[f] A decree of distribution will protect an innocent purchaser or a stranger buying property under it. Tapley v. McPike, 50 Mo. 589.

[g] A decree annulling a will, made after the distribution of the estate, upon the application of one of several heirs, does not render the decree of distribution void. It is valid and binding as to subsequent bona fide purchasers from the distributee. Thompson v. Samson, 64 Cal. 330, 30 P 980.

[h] Notice of account or decree.— An allegation of want of actual notice of the settlement of the account of an executor or administrator, or of the decree of distribution, is unavailing where it appears that the notice provided by the act of assembly has been given. Ferguson v. Yard, 164 Pa. 586, 30 A 517.

[i] Effect of error in decree.—An administration proceeding, or the decree of final settlement, was not void because the court erroneously held that all the property was community property and distributed it to the surviving husband's grantee; but such error should have been corrected by motion for a new trial, or an appeal, and, in the absence of such proceedings for a review, the decree was final and conclusive. O'Brien v. Nelson, 164 Cal. 573, 129 P 985.

[j] The decree is not conclusive as to (1) the fact of payment of debts or distributive shares. Sayre v. Sayre, 16 N. J. Eq. 505 (the question whether an administrator has actually paid a claim under the order of distribution or not can be properly tried only by a suit); Sparhawk v. Buell, 9 Vt. 41. (2) A decree of distribution denying execution purchasers' petition that a share in an estate be distributed to them is not conclusive that they acquired no title at the execution sale. Shirran v. Dallas, 21 Cal. A. 405, 132 P 454, 462. (3) A decree that a party outside of the state, and served only by publication, is not an heir, and distributing personalty, affects only the personalty, and is not binding as to heirship in action by him for realty. Moser v. Osborn, 284 Ill. 141, 119 NE 924.

[c] The right to payment of probated claims cannot be affected by a decree for distribution among heirs, and as to such claims the estate remains unadministered; and the fact that claimant is also administrator, who filed his final account, is immaterial, as such account and petition for its allowance were filed in a representative capacity, and the decree, in which debts were inadvertently overlooked, is not final against the creditor. [b] "No title originates from a decree of distribution of the county court. Such decree has no other effect than to release the title of which the heirs become vested, on the death of the ancestor, from the conditions of administration to which it was subject, and to furnish the heir with legal evidence of such release." Jacquish v. Deming, 40 S. D. 265, 167 NW 157.

person;[9] and a subsequent order directing a different disposition is without authority and void.[10]

As to personal liability of representative. The decree operates to render the representative personally liable for the balance adjudged to be in his hands,[11] and to protect him if he makes distribution in accordance therewith,[12] except of course in cases where the order or decree of distribution is

Mary's Hospital v. Perry, 152 Cal. 338, 92 P 864.

[d] Lands omitted from particular description.—A decree of final distribution which distributed to plaintiff "the residue of said estate hereinafter particularly described, and any other property not now known or discovered which may belong to said estate or in which said estate may have an interest," passed title to plaintiff to lands owned by the estate, although omitted from the particular description. Humphrey v. Los Angeles Protestant Episcopal Church, 154 Cal. 170, 97 P 187.

[e] An assignment of real property in a decree of distribution to a party named, "to have and to hold the same unto her, her heirs and assigns, forever," is an assignment of an estate in fee, although the will under which the decree is made gives the distributee the residue of testator's estate to be used "during her natural life" the same as testator might do if empowered to dispose of the same absolutely. Tidd v. Rines, 26 Minn. 201, 2 NW 497.

[f] Where a legatee accepts the legacy under a distribution decree declaring a trust, the executrix having no supervisory powers over the performance of the trust is not entitled to require an agreement from the distributee to perform the trust as a condition precedent to payment of the legacy. St. Mary's Hospital v. Perry, 152 Cal. 338, 92 P 864.

[g] When the representative has received his share as distributee under a decree of the probate court, such property is no longer liable to a judgment rendered against him as representative. Ferguson v. Yard, 164 Pa. 586, 30 A 517.

[h] Conditional decree. — Even though a decree of distribution of real estate may have been conditional and the condition may not have been performed, such real estate cannot be subjected to the lien of a judgment when the petition therefor fails to state facts showing that there is not sufficient personal property in the hands of the executor to satisfy the claim, and that a sale of the real estate is necessary for the purpose of paying debts of the estate. Prefontaine v. McMicken, 16 Wash. 16, 47 P 231.

[i] A decree in terms distributing the residue (1) known or hereafter known or discovered passes title to land omitted from the particular description. Heydenfeldt v. Osmont, (Cal.) 175 P 1. (2) Such a decree is sufficient to pass title to whatever interest by reversion or otherwise deceased had at the time of his death in property to which he had executed a conveyance. Victoria Hospital Assoc. v. All Persons, etc., 169 Cal. 455, 147 P 124.

[j] Merger of assignment in decree.—Whatever interest is acquired by the assignee of an heir of his interest in the estate is merged in the decree of distribution, so that the assignee's title is referable to the decree, and not to the assignment. Hopkins v. White, 20 Cal. A. 234, 128 P 780.

[k] A decree distributing to an heir or legatee a claim against one indebted to the decedent, while a judgment sufficient to pass title to the distributee, is not a judgment against the debtor for the money or property due on the claim on which the heir or legatee could sue, as assignee. Lapique v. Plummer, 168 Cal. 310, 142 P 1079.

[l] Succession not closed. — A judgment recognizing heirs, and decreeing that they are entitled to receive the estate from the executrix, does not close the succession or authorize the heirs to partition the property. Landry's Succ., 117 La. 193, 41 S 490.

[b] Propriety of decree directly against representative.—Where distribution has been made promptly at the end of the year from the death of decedent by an auditor among collateral kin, and shortly thereafter a boy thirteen years old who was born in a distant state where he always resided appears as the heir of the decedent, and by his guardian demands that the confirmation of the auditor's report be set aside and the discharge of the administrator and his bondsman be revoked, and an agreement is made among the parties to this effect, and to recommit the question of distribution to the auditor, the administrator cannot complain of a decree directly against him, before every available remedy has been exhausted against the collateral kin among whom the estate had been distributed. Shultz's Est., 46 Pa. Super. 546.

[c] Judgment against representative.—Where an executrix wrongfully refused to pay over a legacy distributed to the legatee by the distribution decree in trust for certain purposes, it was not proper that the judgment in favor of the legatee and against the executrix personally for the recovery of the legacy should declare the conditions on which plaintiff held the fund. St. Mary's Hospital v. Perry, 152 Cal. 338, 92 P 864.

[d] Decree not a payment. — A provision in a surrogate's decree that the executor pay over the balance in his hands in execution of the trusts in the will is not a payment, so as to discharge him or to exonerate the fund distributable, and charge the person to whom it is made payable. Such a decree gives to the distributee a remedy against the executor personally for his proportion of the fund found to be in the executor's hands; but this remedy is cumulative, not impairing at all his remedy against the fund itself, which can be exonerated by nothing short of actual payment or some act of the distributee to its prejudice. [a] This is true, even though the distribution was made under a judicial construction of a will which afterward turned out to be erroneous. Fraser v. Page, 82 Ky. 73.

[b] Will void as to children not provided for.—Although a will was void under the statute as to children not named or provided for, a decree of distribution assigning the whole property to testatrix's husband was final and conclusive, after the time for appeal had expired, it not appearing that the court lacked jurisdiction, void.[13] But as it is the duty of an executor to pay personal taxes assessed against him on account of the personalty of his testator without an order of probate court, a judgment of a probate court discharging him as executor on ordering final distribution is no bar to a personal action by a state for taxes so assessed.[14]

[§ 1401] (2) Lien. A decree making distribution subject to a certain claim against the estate, as may be done in some jurisdictions, creates a lien on the estate in the hands of the distributee to the amount of such claim,[15] and an allotment to one distributee subject to a payment to another distributee to equalize the division creates a lien on the property allotted the first distributee to the amount of such payment.[16] The court cannot decree distribution subject to a lien of the representative for his compensation[17] or for money expended by him for the benefit of the estate[18] as such amounts should be paid out of the estate before distribution. A decree on a bill for directions, not fixing the amount due by the executor, but directing him to pay off an estate when collected to certain general legatees after retaining a certain sum in his hands to pay counsel fees and allowances to himself and another sum for a specific legatee, is not such a final decree in money as to constitute a lien upon the property from the date of its rendition in favor of such general legatees.[19]

[§ 1402] (3) Presumption in Favor of Decree. The rule that presumptions in favor of the regularity of proceedings resulting in a judgment will be indulged will be applied to a decree of distribution of an estate,[20] and so it is presumed that the evidence on which an order for decree of distribution was based was in all respects competent and sufficient.[21]

[§ 1403] f. Construction of Decree. The general principles applicable to the construction of judgments[22] are to be applied in construing an order or decree of distribution.[23] Where an order of distribution is susceptible of two constructions, one or that there was fraud. In re Ostlund, 57 Wash. 359, 106 P 1116, 135 AmSR 990.

[c] Where no order for a stay of the decree is had on appeal taken, the administrator will be protected if he makes distribution in good faith in accordance with the decree, although the time for appealing has not expired. Ernst v. Freeman, 129 Mich. 271, 88 NW 636.

[d] Subsequent opening of decree.—Where an administrator in pursuance of a decree has paid over money to a distributee without notice of a bill of review he will be protected against loss should the court subsequently open and change the decree. Stewart's App., 86 Pa. 149.

[e] Informality.—A former resident of Ireland, after living here for more than thirty-five years, died, leaving one who was apparently his widow, and some relatives. There was nothing to suggest to any one that he had a lawful wife and child in Ireland who were not aware of his death in time to assert their claims. A question arose as to who was entitled to the remainder of his estate after his supposed widow's portion was set apart, and the administrator adopted the method prescribed by Code Pub. Gen. L. art 93 § 142, to have the rights of the parties judicially determined. All requirements of the statute were complied with. All persons who apparently had claims on the estate appeared in response to the statutory notice. There was no question as to who the collateral relations were, and the only doubt was as to whether two who claimed to be children of deceased were such as the law would recognize. Pending the proceeding, the claimants agreed in court on a settlement of the controversy between themselves. The administrator gave his consent subject to the approval of the court, which appeared to have been verbally expressed. A claim by an attorney for services in effecting such settlement was allowed, and accounts of the administrator and his successor referring to the agreement and the distribution pursuant thereto were allowed, and expressly approved by the court. It was held that the distribution was made "under the direction and control" of the court as the law requires, and the administrators were not liable to account to the lawful wife and child because the court did not pass a more formal order, as it was requested to do. Garrett v. Kerney, 107 Md. 501, 68 A 1051.

[f] The remedy of a party deprived of his rights by the decree is not against the administrator, but against the distributees who have wrongfully received the estate. In their favor, as against the rightful claimant, the decree does not operate. Sayre v. Sayre, 16 N. J. Eq. 505; Exton v. Zule, 14 N. J. Eq. 501.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) A decree, distributing realty to a widow "as her sole property and estate," restraining her from the disposition and sale of the property, and adjudging the remainder of the estate, real, personal, and mixed, to be distributed to the widow as her sole and separate estate, cut off the right of any children to the remainder therein after her death, and was in effect an adjudication that there were no children or possibility of any, and gave her an absolute fee simple estate in the property, free from any restraint on alienation. Drexler v. Washington Dev. Co., 172 Cal. 758, 159 P 166. (2) Where a decree of distribution gave testatrix's husband a sum of money for his use during his life, and on his death such sum to certain other persons, and on appeal the decree was modified so as to give him such sum for his use during his life, and on his death the unused portion to the remaindermen, the husband took a life interest with power to use during his life as much of the principal as he deemed proper for his own use, but he had no power to dispose of any of the corpus by gift. Hardy v. Mayhew, 158 Cal. 95, 110 P 113, 139 AmSR 73. (3) Where a devise for the use of a devisee for life, with remainder to her heirs, was void under the statute against perpetuities in so far as the attempted disposition of the remainder was concerned, and a distribution under the will assigned certain property in trust for plaintiff's mother, the devisee, for life, and "then after her decease to her lawful heirs forever," plaintiff acquired no vested estate in such property as "heir" of his mother during her life, although such a distribution in so far as it related to the remainder is regarded as a distribution of intestate property, since plaintiff during the life of his mother was not her heir, and the distribution was only operative with reference to definitely ascertained persons in existence sufficiently described and capable of taking, except so far as it permits substitution in case of death of one otherwise entitled to share. Gerard v. Beecher, 80 Conn. 363, 68 A 438, 15 LRANS 900. (4) A decree of distribution adjudging that land be set over to a devisee, her heirs and assigns, as provided in the terms of the will, the same to be to her, and her heirs and assigns forever, is an adjudication that the devisee received a fee simple. Thompson v. Lake Madison Chautauqua Assoc., (S. D.) 170 NW 578. (5) Where a decree distributes, in general terms, all the land to which decedent had title, the rights of the heirs are not limited by a description of the land by metes and bounds in the decree. Marcone v. McDowell, (Cal.) 173 P 465. (6) In a suit by children of a first marriage of a decedent against his executors for the community interest which they claimed to have inherited from their deceased mother, a consent decree provided for the entire division of all property claimed or owned by decedent, both in his own right and as a member of both communities, and adjudged that described land be set apart to each distributee, and that all the right, title, and interest which the decedent's estate and the other parties therein, or either of them, had in it, should be vested in the distributee named, his heirs and assigns in fee simple forever; that the personalty belonging to the estate of decedent and the estate of his first wife should be set apart and vested in the second wife and the children of the second marriage; and that the property partitioned to plaintiffs was in full satisfaction of their interest of which would render it legal and operative, while the other would render it illegal and void, the former must be adopted.[24] The decree should be construed so as to be consistent with the will if this is possible;[25] all the words should be given effect, and none treated as redundant unless such construction is unavoidable.[26] An absolute and unequivocal final decree of distribution is not made ambiguous by a recital that the distribution is according to the will;[27] and where the final decree of distribution necessarily construes the will and is not ambiguous or made subject to the will, the will cannot be resorted to in order to modify or affect it.[28]

[§ 1404] g. Collateral Attack on Decree. As a general rule an order or decree of distribution is not subject to collateral attack,[29] but it has been held otherwise as to a decree made without the notice prescribed by statute.[30]

[§ 1405] h. Enforcement of Decree. A decree of distribution may be enforced by an execution against the property of the representative, in the same manner as a judgment at law,[31] by a suit on in the estate of their parents, except certain property in another state. Some of the property awarded to plaintiffs consisted of lands which belonged to the separate estate of decedent in which their mother had no interest. It was held that the decree finally distributed all the property of the estate subject to administration in the state, as well as the interest inherited by plaintiffs from their mother. Parks v. Knox, 61 Tex. Civ. A. 493, 130 SW 203. (7) A judgment assigning all the property devised according to the provisions of the will, and assigning the homestead to the two minor children of testator in equal shares, subject to the life use thereof by his widow, "in accordance with the provisions of said will," does not transfer title to the homestead, or in any way alter the disposition thereof made by the will. [§ 1406] i. Restraining Enforcement of Decree. Upon a showing of fraud in procuring the decree or other grounds of equitable relief, an injunction may be granted restraining proceedings to enforce the decree;[35] and it has also been held that a temporary injunction will be issued to restrain execution to compel an executor to pay the distributive share due the estate of a distributee where the executor has a disputed claim against that estate and the bond of the administratrix is not sufficient to protect his claim, it appearing that the next of kin of that estate are insolvent.[36] But as the distribution of estates is greatly favored an injunction will not be granted where adequate relief can otherwise be obtained by the petitioner.[37]

[§ 1407] j. Order for Partial Distribution.[38] A decree for partial distribution can be rendered only upon an application therefor,[39] and can only be made in favor of those who join in such application,[40] except where the application is made by the administrator himself.[41] A separate decree should be rendered in favor of each distributee who applies for it.[42] The decree should specify the sum of a deceased legatee, and his executor dies before satisfaction or execution sued out, the right to the legacy of the deceased legatee vests in the administrator de bonis non, but he is not entitled to have execution until he has made himself a party either by scire facias or according to the course of the courts of equity. [h] Effect of appeal.—An attachment will not be granted against the personal representative for failure to obey the decree of distribution, where he has appealed from the decree and filed a bond as required by statute. Matter of Espie, 3 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 270. Compare Matter of Holmes, 79 App. Div. 267, 79 NYS 687 [aff 176 N. Y. 604 mem, 68 NE 1118 mem] (where an executor, on appealing from a final decree directing him to pay certain legacies, gave the undertaking for costs required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2577, but not the undertaking required by § 2578 for staying execution, the respondents could enforce the decree, as if it had not been appealed from, and were not limited to enforcing it by execution).

[i] Only matters occurring subsequent to an order to pay can be set up as defenses against an attachment for failure to comply with such order. Brown's Est., 23 Pa. Dist. 984.

34. Koenig v. Wagner, 126 App. Div. 772, 111 NYS 116 (where, upon the final accounting by an administrator, a decree was rendered by the surrogate ordering distribution and awarding a specified sum to decedent's wife, the administrator of such wife after her death could maintain an action against the administrator of the husband upon the decree of the surrogate to enforce the provision that the payment is made to the wife, although he would have a more summary and efficient remedy to enforce the decree under the statute authorizing the enforcement of such decree by the issuance of execution. Such action was not between the original parties to the settlement in the surrogate's court so as to require leave of court as a prerequisite).

Dist. 231, 16 Pa. Co. 319; Kern's Est., 17 Pa. Co. 437. But compare Keith v. Guthrie, 59 Kan. 200, 52 P 435 (the decree cannot be collaterally attacked by injunction proceedings to restrain its enforcement).

[a] Where residuary legatees take advantage of a mistake in the executor's inventory, by joining in their petition for distribution other parties without their consent and imposing a fraud upon the court, the executor may obtain an injunction to stay proceedings under the decree. Fairly v. Thompson, 34 Miss. 101.

[b] Pleading. — An administrator cannot enjoin the execution of a decree for distribution, on the ground that before his final settlement he had paid off and discharged the amounts due defendants as distributees, in the absence of any averment in his bill that such payments were not examined and allowed or rejected on his formal accounting. Gaillard v. Thomas, 61 Miss. 166.

37. Bates' Est., 5 OhS&CP 545, 7 OhNP 625 (the probate court will not enjoin the distribution of a decedent's estate at the suit of his successor in title to the property on the ground that he holds a bond by which title is guaranteed, and therefore has a claim which will arise if title proves defective, as he has an adequate remedy at law).

38. When partial distribution may be made see supra § 1282.

39. Bludworth v. White, 42 Ala. 662 (where a probate court, upon application, appointed a day for an administrator to make final settlement, but turned it into a partial distribution, without any application for that purpose, either by the administrator or the distributees, and a decree was rendered in favor of the latter for their distributive shares the proceeding was without authority of law, and the decree void).

41. Harrison v. Meadors, 41 Ala. 274.

42. Harrison v. Meadors, 41 Ala. 274.

[a] If a joint decree is rendered against the administrator, in favor of the several distributees, for the sums ascertained to be due to them respectively and a decree for the wife's distributive share is rendered in favor of the husband, "in right of the wife, and for her use," these are to be paid to each legatee, and the amount of the collateral inheritance tax to be deducted therefrom, and previous payments made by the executor to the legatees, and not disputed by the latter, should also be deducted.[43] Such a decree is conclusive only as to the funds then distributed,[44] and does not estop the distributee to assert that the representative had then other funds in his hands.[45] But it is a complete protection to the executor for whatever he may do by way of disposition of the property within its terms.[46] Where an estate has ample funds over and above all possible demands on its moneys to pay sums due under an agreement between the heirs for a distribution, a sum due an heir may be decreed to be paid upon a decree of partial distribution, although the recital of the agreement is to the effect that such sum shall be paid "upon the distribution of the estate."[47]

[§ 1408] 21. Review—a. In General. An appeal from an order or decree of distribution is regulated entirely by statute,[48] but as a general rule an appeal will lie from a final order or decree of distribution or payment,[49] and under some statutes appeals are allowed from other orders or decrees in distribution proceedings.[50] Under some statutes a review is had by writ of error[51] or bill or review.[52]

Where the probate court refuses to entertain a petition for a share in the distribution, the remedy is not by writ of error but by certiorari,[53] or mandamus.[54]

[§ 1409] b. Who May Appeal—(1) In General. As a general rule the right to appeal from an order or decree in distribution proceedings is given to any party aggrieved thereby,[55] and may be exermere irregularities, which will be considered on error as amended. Harrison v. Meadors, 41 Ala. 274.

[b] Whether or not the parties are "aggrieved" within the meaning of the statute is a question to be determined after a hearing upon the merits and not on a motion to dismiss.

cised by a legatee, devisee, or distributee,[56] or the surviving spouse of decedent.[57] It has also been held that under a statute providing that no decree affecting title to realty made in probate proceedings shall be void for want of notice where the executor or administrator was appointed on statutory notice, and no objection to any subsequent order can be taken by a person claiming under decedent on account of want of notice except by direct application to the probate court, or on appeal, one may attack a consent decree of final distribution rendered without notice and without his appearing in court by applying to the probate court and showing his interest in the estate, and thus prosecute an appeal, although only parties to the record may as a general rule appeal.[58] But a judgment of distribution will not be disturbed on appeal at the instance of a person not interested in the estate.[59]

[§ 1410] (2) Personal Representative. As a general rule a personal representative cannot appeal from an order of final distribution,[60] unless he is a party in interest,[61] or acts as representative of all the parties,[62] or takes his appeal in the interest of the estate as such.[63] Where the order is of such a nature that his obedience to it might subject him to a personal liability, he is held to be a party interested and may appeal;[64] and upon this ground it is generally held that the representative is such a party in interest as to enable him to appeal from an order of partial distribution.[65]

within the time allowed therefor by statute.[66] An appeal from an order for distribution before the entry at large in the minutes of a decree describing the property distributed is premature and must be dismissed.[67]

[§ 1412] (2) Notice of Appeal. Under a statute providing that on appeal from a decree assigning the residue of an estate appellant shall serve written notice on the adverse party or attorney, notice of such appeal served on the executor is sufficient.[68] Where an order settling the executor's account and a decree of distribution are rendered at the same time, an appeal from an order settling the account will not be dismissed because the notice of appeal therefrom was not served upon any other party than the executor;[69] and, where the order settling the account is reversed, it necessarily vacates the decree of distribution, and in such case the appeal from the decree will not be dismissed for failure to serve the notice of appeal upon one of the distributees named in the decree of distribution.[70]

[§ 1413] (3) Petition for Review. Some liberality should be exercised with respect to the form of a petition for review made by a nonresident after an adjudication has become absolute, and defects may be cured by amendment.[71]

[§ 1414] (4) Appeal Bond. Under some statutes appellants are required to execute a bond,[72] the effect of which is to stay proceedings on the judgment or decree appealed from,[73] so far as may be necessary for the protection of the interests of the appealing parties.[74]

[§ 1415] (5) Bill of Exceptions. Usually the record on appeal from a judgment of distribution, in the nature of a judgment roll, will be sufficient without a bill of exceptions,[75] but where the determination depended wholly or in part on the facts established by the evidence, so much of the evidence as is pertinent may be embodied in a bill of exceptions.[76]

[§ 1416] d. Parties to Appeal. All the parties interested in the distribution must be made parties where one party appeals from the order of distribution.[77] But where the appeal is from an order denying a new trial to one who had petitioned as heir for his distributive share of the estate, beneficiaries under the will who did not appear and resist the petition are not necessary parties to the appeal.[78]

[§ 1417] e. Joinder or Consolidation of Appeals. The general rule that two or more separate judgments, decrees, or orders cannot be brought up for appellate review by one writ of error or appeal[78½] applies to decrees of distribution.[79] But it is no objection to an appeal taken by an administrator, both from an order of the district court sustaining objection to a final account and also from an order entering a decree of distribution, that thereby two separate actions have been united in one appeal, as such orders are not actions in a legal sense.[80] Where the legal issues involved on an appeal from a decree directing executors to turn over a sum of money to the residuary legatee are the same as those involved on an appeal from a decree entered in the matter of the intermediate accountings of the executors, the proper and logical method is for the parties to unite in presenting one set of appeal papers and have all questions litigated at one time.[81]

[§ 1418] f. Effect of Appeal. A probate decree appealed from remains in full force until reversed[82] but appeals from an order denying a petition for partial distribution of an estate suspend the court's power to distribute the estate pending the appeal.[83] Where, on a petition for partial distribution to legatees, the other legatees and devisees did not appear at the hearing, or in any manner object to the order in favor of petitioners, but an appeal was taken by the executrix in her representative capacity only on the ground that the petition was insufficient in respect to its statements as to the condition and value of the estate and the amount of the debts, the order of distribution became final in so far as it allowed the legacies.[84]

[§ 1419] g. Abandonment of Appeal. The fact that persons who had appealed from a decree denying partial distribution, in which proceeding they had claimed under the will, asserted a claim as heirs on a subsequent application for a final distribution in the event the will was invalid, was not an election to claim as heirs so as to operate as an abandonment of their appeal from the decree in the partial distribution proceedings.[85]

[§ 1420] h. Review and Disposition of Cause.[86] As a general rule the appellate court will review and adjudicate only such questions as were properly raised in the lower court and which appear on the record,[87] and in the absence of proper pleadings and proof may dismiss the appeal.[88] Under some statutes the appellate court proceeds as though the proceedings had been originally instituted in that court.[89] Where an item of a will creating a charitable trust is made a part of the decree of distribution, such item may be considered, on appeal from such decree, for the purpose of determining the intention of the testatrix, although the decree is conclusive on the trustee as to the extent of his rights.[90] Where questions affecting the separate and community estate of testator have been determined in the course of the administration of the estate and in special proceedings for that purpose, findings made on an application for distribution which merely recite the ultimate facts so previously found are not reviewable on appeal from the distribution decree.[91] A judgment or decree of distribution will not be disturbed on appeal for errors not seriously affecting the justice and equality of the distribution,[92] or for insufficiency of evidence where it warrants the findings on which the decree appealed from was predicated.[93] But failure to require security from legatees to whom distribution is made may constitute an abuse of discretion as will warrant a reversal.[94] On an appeal from a decree ordering the personalty of an estate, excepting cash, and the realty to be turned over to the distributees, the decree will be modified so as to make the realty subject to the charge of any final settlement expenses if the funds collected by the administrator shall become inadequate for that purpose, where it is doubtful whether the funds are ample for all purposes of final settlement.[95] Where the orphans' court has entered a decree in exact accordance with the judgment and opinion of the appellate court, such decree will not be reversed on a second appeal, because there was filed in the orphans' court, after the decree was entered, a record from another state showing that one of the distributees had been adjudicated a lunatic; but the appellate court will affirm the decree and direct that the share of the lunatic shall be paid over to the latter's committee upon proof to the orphans' court that the committee had entered a proper bond.[96]

Where proof of heirship of foreign heirs is insufficient, but it appears that further testimony might be offered, the cause may be remanded for retrial on that issue.[97]

When questions of fact have not been determined before a decree of distribution, and are essential to a proper distribution should the lower court's view of the law be incorrect, the decree will be vacated, and the record remitted for further proceedings, with leave to take testimony.[98]

Where only one of several persons interested has taken an appeal, which results in a modification of the judgment, but it is manifest that other persons having an interest the same as appellant are necessarily affected in the same way and to the same extent by the modification, the benefit of the order of modification may not be confined to the appellant alone, but must be awarded to such others of those similarly situated as ask to be placed on the same footing.[99]

When two appeals are taken by different heirs from final decree of distribution, and are based on the same record and heard together, the court should adjudicate the entire matter of settlement of the estate in one judgment.[1]

Meeker v. Arrowsmith, 16 N. J. L. 227.

[e] When not charged against representative.—An executor will not be charged with costs of litigating a demand of the devisees for interest on a trust fund, where the demand included more than the devisees were entitled to receive, although the general rule is that an executor must pay costs when he pays interest. [c] Discretion of court.—The retention of assets to meet an unliquidated demand against the estate is not the right of the executor, but rests in the discretion of the probate court. Ing v. Baltimore Assoc., 21 Md. 426.

[d] Where a claimant makes no effort to enforce his claim (1) which is disputed, the probate court, on entering a final decree on an administrator's accounting, will not direct him to retain the amount of the disputed claim. Matter of Rasch, 26 Misc. 459, 55 NYS 434, 28 NYCivProc 98. (2) But it is otherwise if the claimant makes an effort and his failure to sue was because of the nonresidence of the administrator, and his refusal to make a voluntary appearance. [h] Alternative order pending appeal.—When the decision of the commissioner of internal revenue imposing a tax on a legacy is in dispute, and the accountant wishes to make distribution without payment of the legacy tax, the auditing judge may make an alternative order that the legatee secure the accountant in case the decision of the commissioner is sustained, or, failing that, that the accountant retain a fund sufficient to defray the tax, if it shall be finally held to be demandable. [a] Illustration.—An executor in filing his account has no right to reserve an amount in blank for discharging the necessary remaining expenses of closing the succession as the purpose for which they were reserved, the representative must account for them as assets of the estate to the person entitled to receive them.[11]

Where the representative has given bond to pay debts and legacies, a retention or reservation of assets is not permissible.[12]

[§ 1424] R. Liability to Refund on Deficiency of Assets[13]—1. In Absence of Refunding Bond or Other Indemnity—a. In General. As a general rule, in the absence of a statute, where a personal representative makes voluntary distribution of a balance or settles legacies in full, he cannot maintain an action at law against the distributees or legatees to compel a refunding upon an insufficiency of assets in his hands for debts or claims,[14] except where a special promise to refund has been made,[15] or a refunding bond has been given.[16] Nor in the absence of a statute has the probate court jurisdiction to compel a legatee or distributee to refund.[17] Equity, however, will usually give relief and compel the legatee or distributee to refund his pro rata share of the deficiency, in proportion to the amount he has received from the estate,[18] althe law fixes the amount. Linton's Succ., 31 La. Ann. 130.

[b] Amount proper to be reserved.—Defendant was appointed executor of an estate which was appraised at four thousand one hundred and eighteen dollars and seventy-eight cents. After his appointment the executor managed the testator's business for a year, and finally closed it, realizing for the benefit of the estate a profit of six thousand eight hundred dollars. No account was filed until some eight years after letters were granted, when on citation the executor filed an account showing a balance in his hands, after payment of debts, of three thousand three hundred and seventeen dollars and ninety-eight cents, which he had had in his possession for nearly seven years. It was held that since the executor's commissions, if allowed on the entire amount passing through his hands, could not have exceeded eight hundred and thirty-five dollars and twelve cents, and the only attorney's fees allowable were such as were authorized for the probate of the will, notice to creditors, and preparing an inventory and the appraisement and an account and exhibit, it was not error to find that a distribution of one thousand and five hundred dollars to the widow's assignee would leave sufficient money to pay the executor's commissions, a reasonable attorney's fee, and charges of closing the estate, and to order the executor to make such payment. "If an executor, thinking that he has settled the affairs of his testator, pay the legacies, I have no difficulty in saying that a court of common law would not entertain an action for money had and received against a legatee, since such a court cannot take into consideration, as a court of equity would do, the mode in which the funds might have been applied." [a] Void legacies.—The rule does not apply to payment of legacies which are subsequently declared void by the courts, and in such cases the legatees will be compelled to refund, and will not be relieved by the fact that the executor would be protected from personal liability for such payment. [d] Liability for interest or income.—(1) A legatee or distributee, when called upon to refund, will not be charged with interest prior to the demand (Fripp v. Talbird, 1 Hill Eq. (S. [a] Illustrations.—(1) An administrator, against whom a judgment was recovered after he had delivered over the property of his intestate to the distributees, may recover from them each the ratable part of such debt, when it appears that the intestate was only surety for the debt recovered, and that at the time of such delivery the principal was solvent; but the solvent distributees will not be required to pay the ratable parts of the insolvent ones. Clark v. Williams, 70 N. C. 679. (2) Where, without fraud or collusion, a decree is rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction against an executor, he may bring his suit in equity against the legatees for contribution to satisfy such decree, without first paying the money himself, or appealing from the decree against him, although requested and advised to do so. Bower v. Glendening, 4 Munf. (18 Va.) 219.

[c] A mistake either of law or fact is sufficient to authorize the recovery of an overpayment. Mansfield v. Lynch, 59 Conn. 320, 22 A 313, 12 LRA 285.

[d] Notice of a remote contingent liability on the part of a testator is not sufficient to prevent his executor from distributing his residuary estate; and if the executor distributes with such notice and the liability afterward ripens into a debt, he will be entitled to call on the residuary legatees to refund. Jervis v. Wolferstah, L. R. 18 Eq. 18, 2 ERC 165.

[e] An order of a probate court authorizing the compromise of certain claims accruing after distribution was a determination of the existence thereof, and it made no difference that authority had not yet been given to the receiver, with whom such compromise was made, by the court, and the executor could at once compel the beneficiaries to repay an amount sufficient to cover the amount agreed on. Bidwell v. Beckwith, 86 Conn. 462, 85 A 682.

[f] An executor who receives money as residuary legatee cannot maintain a bill in equity against a specific legatee to compel him to refund pro rata money paid to him in satisfaction of his legacy, on account of expenses incurred subsequently to the payment of such legacy, where it appears that he has received as residuary legatee more than the entire amount of the expenses so incurred. White v. Easters, 38 Ala. 154.

Bidwell v. Beckwith, 86 Conn. 462, 85 A 682.

[h] Special circumstances must be shown.—In order to compel a refunding in such cases the representative must allege and prove special circumstances showing that he was in no default in not completing the settlement before making the payment or distribution. creditors for the purpose of settling his estate, and a third person became a party and presented a claim against the estate, and such third person was defeated in his action and executed a supersedeas bond, and subsequently the court directed the commissioner and receiver to turn over the funds of the estate to a trustee for the heirs of decedent, it was held that the court, on the motion of the third person, was authorized to direct the trustee and the heirs to return to the court's receiver a specified part of the fund, on it being satisfied that there was not enough of the estate under the control of the court to pay the debts.[24]

[§ 1425] b. Proceedings to Enforce Liability—(1) Joint or Several Proceedings. Under a statute providing for proceedings at law or in equity for contribution, it has been held that such proceeding if, at law, must be against the parties liable to contribution severally,[25] but, if in equity, may be against them jointly.[26]

[§ 1426] (2) Time to Sue and Limitations. While laches or lapse of time may bar the representative's suit in equity for a refunding,[27] it has been held that limitations do not commence to run against a bill by him for refunding from a distributee on a deficiency of assets to pay debts, until the discovery by the administrator of such deficiency, where he has been diligent in the premises.[28]

[§ 1427] (3) Defenses. Where the probate court upon due application has authorized the settlement of claims and no appeal has been taken from its order, one taking under the will, who had actual notice of the application for leave to settle, cannot set up a defense thereto in an action against him by the executor for contribution.[29]

[§ 1428] (4) Parties. In a suit in equity against a distributee for contribution, all distributees within the jurisdiction of the court should be made parties,[30] except those who have refunded their respective portions of the deficiency.[31] Unsatisfied creditors may be made parties to a bill for restitution against a residuary legatee who is also a devisee of land charged with the payment of debts,[32] but not where the devise of a residuary legatee and the residuary bequest are not charged with the payment of the testator's debts.[33] Where all the distributees are not within the jurisdiction of the court, the representative may sue such of them as are within the reach of the court's process,[34] and if all of them are nonresidents, he can attach such property in the state as is subject to an attachment in equity.[35]

[§ 1429] (5) Evidence. In a suit to compel a residuary legatee to refund an advance made to him, a refunding bond executed by him but not sued on, is admissible to show the prepayment and acceptance of the advance.[36]

[§ 1430] (6) Judgment or Decree. It has been held that a decree against several distributees for a refunding should not be several, but should be joint, requiring each to pay pro rata.[37] A decree for contribution by devisees and legatees in payment of debts and other liabilities of the estate is no more than a personal judgment, enforceable by execution.[38]

[§ 1431] 2. Liability on Refunding Bond or Other Indemnity—a. In General. The liability of a legatee or distributee upon a refunding bond or other written indemnity depends of course upon the conditions of the instrument and varies accordingly,[39] his usual liability being only for his pro rata share of the deficiency of assets to pay subsequent-

[b] Where the debt due is that of the representative himself, his own knowledge of the debt or claim when he paid the legatee or distributee hinders his remedy to obtain a refund. Lang v. Howell, 21 NYS 102, 29 AbbNCas 117, Pow. Surr. 243.

[c] Waste of coexecutor.—If a legacy to an executor be of equal grade with those of other legatees, and because of the waste of a coexecutor who has died the assets are insufficient to pay all the legacies, the executor can only retain his due proportion of his legacy. [a] Legal costs and charges against an estate afterward incurred in the settlement of it are within the terms of a bond reciting that the distributees would save the administrator harmless from all "debts, dues, demands and claims now due, or to grow due hereafter." Springsteen v. Samson, 32 N. Y. 703.

[b] A sum allowed by the probate court to the administrator as commissions is a "claim against the estate," within the bond given him on his turning over most of the estate to the heir, conditioned that the heir shall refund to the administrator such sums as may be necessary to pay "any and all claims that may be finally allowed against the estate, together with all necessary costs and expenses in defending the same, so that the said [administrator] shall be held harmless from loss or damage," it not being necessary that the claim be one of such nature as to require and be capable of defense. Callaway v. Title Guaranty, etc., Co., 132 Mo. A. 466, 111 SW 905 (recovery might be had where a claim of the administrator for commissions was allowed, although when the bond was given it was not expected such an item for commissions would arise, and the administrator had made a void agreement with the heir to act for less than his lawful commissions).

[c] Claims of legatees are demands against the estate covered by the condition of a refunding bond, to secure the repayment of a sum paid in distribution, "to discharge any debt or demand against the estate where executors shall not have other assets to pay." Allwein v. Werntz, 7 Pa. Cas. 44, 9 A 925.

[d] A writing of indemnity other than a bond may be duly enforced, (1) whether under seal or not, the benefit conferred by the early receipt of money furnishing a sufficient consideration for the promise. Lowery v. Perry, 85 N. C. 131. (2) But an action upon a promise by a distributee to indemnify an administrator for any advance made in excess of his share is not maintainable where the administrator has resigned without an allowance for the sum advanced in his final account and his successor has paid to the distributee such an amount that the distributive share exceeds that sum. Stone v. Bancroft, 108 Mass. 98.

[e] A promise to refund given to an administrator by one to whom he paid his distributive share gives no cause of action to those who are rightly entitled to the money so paid, and the money can be recovered only by the administrator to whom the promise was made. Norwood v. O'Neal, 112 N. C. 127, 16 SE 759.

[f] The value of the estate is no defense to a residuary legatee who has given the usual bond to pay all debts and legacies and has taken the estate and enjoyed it, when called upon to pay the outstanding legacies or debts, on the ground that the estate is less valuable than he had supposed; and he cannot claim his release on a surrender of the assets. Hatheway v. Weeks, 34 Mich. 237.

ly discovered debts of the estate,[40] not exceeding the value of property which the legatee or distributee has received from the estate without interest.[41]

[§ 1432] b. Enforcement of Liability—(1) Right of Action. The right to maintain an action on a refunding bond depends upon the terms of the statute providing therefor. It has been held that such action may be maintained by the creditors themselves,[42] or by the representative for their benefit;[43] but the representative cannot recover for his own use, by an action on the refunding bond, the amount paid to a legatee or distributee.[44]

[§ 1433] (2) Summary Remedy by Scire Facias. Scire facias, after a decree on a probate petition, issues on the refunding bond as a summary remedy at the instance of a creditor, under some statutes.[45]

[§ 1434] (3) Conditions Precedent. Whether there is a deficiency of assets and the extent thereof can be determined only by a settlement in the probate court,[46] and therefore until such settlement has been made the obligor in the bond cannot be held liable thereon.[47] Under a statute providing that if distributees of an estate are required to repay an amount distributed to them before final settlement a citation to show cause shall first issue, and, after hearing an order directing payment, an action may be maintained by the executor or administrator on the distributees' bonds if the money is not paid within the time allowed, an order settling and allowing an administrator's account, and distributing the estate subject to the distributees' bonds, is not a judgment against the sureties, but before they can be finally concluded they have a right to be heard in a regular action to which they are parties.[48] To entitle one whose estate has been distributed under a presumption of death and intestacy to recover of the surety on the bond given by a distributee it is not necessary that he first proceed against the administrator by demand or suit,[49] or that the order directing the distribution of the estate be first set aside and vacated.[50]

[§ 1435] (4) Time to Sue and Limitations. An action on a refunding bond is not premature if brought after suit begun against the obligee and after proceeds of the estate in his hands, including the bond, are ordered to be turned over to the administrator and after the money has been demanded and refused.[51] The statute of limitations begins to run against an action on such a bond from the discovery of the deficiency of the assets and not from the date of the bond.[52]

[§ 1436] (5) Pleading. In an action of debt by the representative on a refunding bond, he should aver and prove facts showing a breach of the conditions of the bond, as that he has given notice of debts to the legatee or distributee, that he had not or has not assets to pay such debts, that he has made a request for a return of so much of the legacy or distributive share as is necessary to discharge those debts in due proportion, and that the amount requested is unpaid;[53] and should demand judgment for the exact amount of the claim upon such legatee or distributee and no more.[54]

[§ 1437] (6) Evidence. Where to a scire facias upon a refunding bond defendant pleads that the debt recovered against the administrator was not justly due, and that the administrator fraudulently and collusively with plaintiff confessed the judgment, the burden of proof lies on defendant to verify his plea by proof of the fraud, otherwise judgment must be rendered against him on the scire facias.[55] Executors who sue on a bond which was taken from decedent's nephew on paying to

[a] No liability for commissions and expenses.—A refunding bond conditioned for repayment by a legatee of so much as should be necessary to pay debts which the executor had no assets to meet entitles the executor to recover only for payment of subsequently discovered debts, and not for a balance due to the executor for commissions and expenses of administration, which were not named in the condition of the bond. Lloyd v. Rowe, 20 N. J. L. 680.

[b] A debt due by a legatee to outside parties is not covered by such bond, and if paid by the representative under an attachment of the legatee's interest cannot be recovered by the representative in an action against the legatee on the bond. Desmond v. Fisher, 152 Mass. 521, 25 NE 968.

XII. SALES UNDER ORDER OF COURT[57]

[§ 1438] A. In General; Statutory Provisions. While at common law the real estate of a decedent was not subject to his debts,[58] nor was the personal representative authorized to sell it in the absence of some testamentary provision authorizing him to do so,[59] statutes have been universally enacted providing for a sale of the realty by an executor or administrator by the license of and under the supervision of the courts when the circumstances of the case render such a course necessary.[60] In order for a sale to be authorized under such a statute it must be shown that the circumstances are such as are contemplated by the statute,[61] and in obtaining an order for sale and making the sale, the statutory method of procedure must be complied with.[62] With regard to personalty, modern statutes, as has been

[d] Lien created by proceedings for sale.—Proceedings by the representative to sell realty to pay debts create a lien superior to any that may thereafter attach against the estate at the instance of creditors of an heir. Carter v. Carter, 4 KyL 718.

[a] In the chancery court as well seen, sometimes curtail the representative's common-law power of sale, and require him to obtain an order of court authorizing a sale.[63]

[§ 1439] B. When Authorized—1. In General. The court may usually direct the sale of personal property which is of a perishable nature, or a sale of which is necessary for its preservation,[64] and in some jurisdictions a sale of either realty or personalty may be authorized or directed where this is necessary for the general purpose of administration or where it is apparent that such course is for the best interest of the estate.[65] But in order to justify an order for the sale of realty it must be shown that the sale is necessary for some authorized purpose.[66] It has been held that a sale of realty may be ordered to provide the support to which as in the probate court the statutory requirements with respect to the sale of realty must be complied with. Roy v. Roy, 159 Ala. 555, 48 S 793.

[b] Where one of the joint purchasers of real estate dies, a proceeding to sell the lands to equalize the payments does not fall within the rules applicable to cases of sale for partition and for the payment of debts, in relation to the necessary proof, account, etc. Rankin v. Black, 1 Head (Tenn.) 650.

[c] Statute not validating irregular proceeding.—A statute which provides that, when the estate of a decedent who left a widow and children does not exceed fifteen hundred dollars, the court shall set apart the whole estate to the widow and children, subject only to certain expenses, does not validate an administrator's sale of land by order of the court to pay such expenses, without following the proceedings prescribed by statute, although the whole estate of which the land is a part has been set aside to the widow and children. Wills v. Pauly, 116 Cal. 575, 48 P 709.

[a] Duty to apply for leave to sell; fluctuating stocks.—"It may be conceded that an executor, finding himself in possession of property of a perishable nature, or of property which was likely to depreciate in value unless immediately disposed of, would be chargeable with the duty of appearing forthwith before the court with an application for leave to sell; and, for that matter, it would seem to be the part of ordinary business prudence to so proceed, even though the statute book contained no requirement in terms on the subject. But by the expression, 'likely to depreciate in value,' as used in the statute, nothing more was meant, as we think, than some permanent loss to the property in whole or in part. Most certainly it was not intended thereby to require under penalty of personal liability an immediate sale of all property subject to fluctuations in market value, and solely because thereof. Indeed, by inexorable law of the world of commerce, every species of personal property which is the subject of barter and sale is held to respond to the frequent, if not daily, fluctuation in market values; and, if an executor were bound at his peril to guard against such, there would be as much reason in holding him to a liability for selling too soon as there would be in mulcting him in damages for having held too long. In any event, the subject cannot be governed by a hard and fast rule. Reasonable business prudence is all that is required at the hands of one managing an estate." Harris v. Harris, 86 S. C. 409, 68 SE 628. (2) A sale of real estate has also been allowed on the sole ground that there would be a great deal of litigation and expense necessary in order to recover it for the estate. Poor v. Boyce, 12 Tex. 440.

[b] Land of little value.—If the value of the land is so little that the whole would not produce more than the expenses of administration, a sale should not be ordered. In re Cook, 137 Cal. 184, 69 P 968.

[c] Sale of notes and accounts.—Where notes and accounts due the succession are numerous and small in amount, and constitute, as it were, a mass of bad debts, the discretion of the judge of probate in ordering their sale at public auction will be considered as legally and properly exercised. Pool's Succ., 14 La. Ann. 677.

[d] Pending a contest over the probate of a will or the grant of letters of administration, the person in whose charge the personalty has been placed will be generally allowed to sell that portion of the assets which may be necessary for the preservation and benefit of the estate. Public Administrator v. Burdell, 4 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 252.

[e] Unreasonable withholding of consent.—Where the price offered for real estate is advantageous, and the rights of the only objecting party in interest, if he has any, will not be affected by the sale, the withholding of his consent is unreasonable and a sale will be ordered, since an unreasonable withholding of consent is one of the grounds upon which a sale may be decreed under the act of April 27, 1855 § 5. Goddard's Est., 9 Pa. Dist. 703.

[f] Estates of deceased soldiers; consent of heirs.—Harris v. Graves, 26 Tex. 577.

[g] When sale of judgment not proper.—Where several persons, as heirs and legal representatives, are the owners in indivision of a judgment from which a devolutive appeal is pending, the sale of the judgment will not be ordered to effect a partition, on the application of one of the coöwners, opposed by the others, when it does not appear that the administrator has made any effort to execute the judgment, especially in a case where the sale would inure to the benefit of one only of the coproprietors, and to the detriment of the others. Rochereau v. Maignan, 32 La. Ann. 45.

[h] When order of sale properly refused.—It is the duty of the administrator to ascertain the nature and extent of the assets before he attempts to sell them by an indefinite description of the rights and interests of the succession in lands and debts, and an order of sale under such description will be refused, although the sale has been advised by a family meeting, for if decedent had no rights the sale would be a fraud upon the purchasers, while if he had rights the vagueness of their description would necessarily operate to the injury of the minor heirs. sale should be ordered to be made for the payment of the debts generally and not merely for the payment of a single debt.[70] The death of the owner of lands does not give his personal representatives or his creditors such an interest in his real estate as precludes the legislature from repealing the laws authorizing sales to be made by executors or administrators for the payment of debts.[71]

The fact that an administrator has wasted assets sufficient to pay the debts will not deprive creditors of the right to resort to other assets unadministered for the payment of their debts and to procure a sale of decedent's land.[72]

[§ 1441] b. Existence and Validity of Debts—(1) In General. In order to authorize a sale of land to pay debts, the existence of valid and legally enforceable debts of the estate must be shown.[73] A sale should not be ordered where the alleged

[a] A debt due to the representative (1) may be sufficient to authorize a sale of realty for payment thereof. In re Reynolds, 195 Pa. 225, 45 A 726. (2) If the personal property is insufficient to pay the debts, and the administrator bona fide and under proper circumstances advances money to pay them, the court may order a sale of real estate to reimburse him. Liddel v. McVickar, 11 N. J. L. 44, 19 AmD 369.

[b] Claim of sureties on administration bond.—Where application is made by an administrator for an order to sell real estate to pay a claim held by the sureties on his official bond, the court may, if it appears from his accounts that he is indebted to the estate, refuse to make the order, if such sale will injure other creditors, or, where the estate is solvent, if it will injure the heirs. Deans v. Wilcoxon, 25 Fla. 980, 7 S 163.

[c] Sale to obtain money for payment of taxes allowed.—Sales v. Cosgrove, 25 SW 594, 15 KyL 791; Welsh v. Perkins, 8 Oh. 52.

[d] Equitable demands may be proved on the application to sell the real estate of an intestate to pay his debts, and if the claim is an equitable lien on a portion of the real estate, and not secured by judgment or mortgage, or expressly charged on the lot, the court may order it to be paid out of the proceeds of the real estate. Renwick v. Renwick, 1 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 234.

[e] The fact that a person's claim as heir is barred does not affect the right of the representative to sell the land to pay a debt of the claimant regularly established against the estate. Sutton v. Read, 176 Ill. 69, 51 NE 801.

[f] Although debts are directed to be paid out of rents and profits by the will, the court will decree a sale if it is necessary. Berry v. Askham, 2 Vern. Ch. 26, 23 Reprint 627.

[g] The advice of a family meeting is not necessary to authorize a sale of real estate to pay debts. Irwin v. Flynn, 110 La. 829, 34 S 794; Childs v. Lockett, 107 La. 270, 31 S 751; Fluker's Succ., 32 La. Ann. 292; Davidson v. Davidson, 28 La. Ann. 269; Kiser's Succ., 22 La. Ann. 175; Carter v. McManus, 15 La. Ann. 676.

[h] Effect of partition.—A mere order for partition does not withdraw the property designated in it from the jurisdiction of the probate court so as to prevent a sale of the land in further administration for the purpose of paying debts. But it is otherwise if such partition is made and approved. The making of a partial partition does not, however, deprive the probate court of the right to order a sale in due course of administration of land not included in the actual partition. Lee v. Henderson, 75 Tex. 190, 12 SW 981.

[i] The occupation of an intestate's real estate by one of his two administrators, who is also one of the heirs, without paying or charging himself with debts, is not of itself a bar to granting a petition to sell real estate for the payment of debts. Palmer v. Palmer, 13 Gray (Mass.) 326.

[j] The fact that the administrator's bond has been reduced by order of the probate court upon the assumption that all the lands belonging to the estate have been partitioned and delivered to the heirs does not affect the status of lands not in fact partitioned or deprive the court of power to order a sale of such lands. Lee v. Henderson, 75 Tex. 190, 12 SW 981.

[k] Effect of suit against representative alone.—A creditor who sues the representative alone without joining or making the heirs parties to the suit does not thereby release the real estate from the lien of his debt or claim, if any there was, so as to deprive the court of power to order a sale for payment of such debt. Murphy's App., 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 165 [foll Weaver's App., 19 Pa. 416].

[l] A final decree discharging the administrator discharges the lien of creditors on real estate which might have been previously sold to pay debts. State v. Ramsey County Prob. Ct., 40 Minn. 296, 41 NW 1033.

[m] Sale cannot be made to effect compromise of disputed claim. — Bompart v. Lucas, 21 Mo. 598.

71. See Constitutional Law § 516.

[a] Sale after repeal. — Where proceedings for a sale of real estate of an intestate to pay debts were commenced before the repeal of the act authorizing such sale, and the administrators, notwithstanding the repeal, sold the land and appropriated the proceeds to pay the debts, the sale was void. Hamilton Bank v. Dudley, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 492, 7 L. ed. 496. See also Perry v. Clarkson, 16 Oh. 571 (where the order of sale was passed after the repeal).

[b] An order to sell is not a "suit or prosecution pending," within the exception of a general repealing act providing that any depending suit or prosecution may be carried on to final judgment, and executed agreeably to the repealed laws under which it may have been begun. [a] If demands against an estate have been adjusted by mutual agreement to the satisfaction of the persons interested a sale of real estate should not be ordered to pay them. Tilton v. Tilton, 41 N. H. 479.

[b] A gift of the donor's note in her lifetime, without consideration, was not such a "debt" against her estate as would justify the sale of her real estate to pay it. Dacy v. Goll, 242 Ill. 606, 90 NE 179.

[c] A legacy given in consideration of services rendered by the legatee to the testator, under an agreement made before the services were rendered that compensation should be made in that manner, is not a debt for which real estate may be sold. Markley's Est., 20 Phila. (Pa.) 175.

[d] Claim for maintenance of children.—A claim of an administratrix who is also the mother of the decedent's infant children, for their maintenance, is not a claim against decedent for which his real estate may be sold. Woodruff v. Cook, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 259.

[e] Debts of married woman. — The probate court has no jurisdiction to order the sale of lands in which a married woman had a separate estate, to pay debts contracted during her coverture. Boston v. Murray, 94 Mo. 175, 7 SW 273 [foll Davis v. Smith, 75 Mo. 219].

[f] Debts and funeral expenses of debts are fraudulent,[74] in anticipation of an indebtedness which is not valid and subsisting at the time, and may never exist,[75] or for raising a fund to meet claims which are contested and doubtful,[76] although the representative's rejection of a claim does not deprive the probate court of power to order a sale of realty to pay such claim.[77] The allowance of a claim by the court of probate sufficiently establishes its validity to authorize an order for a sale of realty for payment thereof,[78] and where there are valid and subsisting claims against the estate, errors or irregularity in the allowance of such claims will not vitiate a sale for their payment.[79]

[§ 1442] (2) Debts Barred by Limitations or Nonclaim. A license should not be granted to sell lands for the payment of debts already barred by the statutes of limitations or nonclaim,[80] or for the wife.—The orphans' court may not order a sale of the real estate of a testator to pay the debts and funeral expenses of his wife, notwithstanding his will, devising his estate to his wife for life and at her death and the payment of the wife's debts and funeral expenses to a daughter. Morris v. Dorsey, 77 N. J. Eq. 460, 77 A 44 [aff 80 N. J. Eq. 555, 85 A 1134].

[g] Advances to infant distributees.—An administrator who has made advances to the infant distributees in excess of their share of the personal assets is not entitled to have the land sold for his reimbursement. Munden v. Bailey, 70 Ala. 63.

[h] Debts of a devisee for life are not debts for the payment of which real estate may be sold, although the will directs payment of debts. Morris v. Dorsey, 77 N. J. Eq. 460, 77 A 44 [aff 80 N. J. Eq. 555, 85 A 1134].

[i] Expenses of lunacy proceeding.—The expenses of a lunacy proceeding which were allowed against the lunatic's estate were not a debt for which a sale of his real estate could be ordered. Young's Est., 8 Pa. Co. 4.

[j] Breach by heirs of decedent's contract to sell real estate.—A claim for unliquidated damages for breach by decedent's heirs of a contract to sell real estate entered into by him during his lifetime is not a debt for which his real estate can be sold. McGaw v. Gortner, 96 Md. 489, 54 A 133.

[k] False claims.—Where a proceeding instituted in behalf of decedent's widow for the sale of his real estate for the payment of debts is founded upon false claims fraudulently made for the purpose of procuring the sale of such lands, a sale made thereunder to the widow is void. Lawson v. Acton, 57 N. J. Eq. 107, 40 A 584.

[l] The costs of an action against decedent's surviving partner are not a debt of the decedent for which his real estate may be sold. Matter of Stowell, 15 Misc. 533, 37 NYS 1127, 25 NYCivProc 316.

[m] A bond for title is prima facie a claim for land, and its approval by the probate judge and the administrator does not convert it into a money claim against the estate for the amount of the penalty, and hence an order to sell property for the payment of such claim is properly refused. Gregory v. Hughes, 20 Tex. 345.

[n] Advances of representative to pay for public land.—Where the head of a family made entry upon public land and died before final proof, and after her death her administrator advanced the money and paid the government for the land, and obtained a patent to it for her heirs, and subsequently obtained an order from the probate court to sell the land to repay him, the money so advanced was not a lien upon the land, and no title thereto passed by a sale under such order. Coulson v. Wing, 42 Kan. 507, 22 P 570, 16 AmSR 503; Black v. Dressell, 20 Kan. 153.

[o] Taxes accruing after death of the owner will not justify an administration sale of land. In re Webster, 74 Or. 489, 145 P 1063.

[p] Proof of payment of part of the indebtedness of the estate will not defeat an order of sale. Green v. Cannady, 71 S. C. 317, 51 SE 92.

[q] If any part of the indebtedness alleged is found to be due the chancellor has jurisdiction to order a sale of part of the property to pay it. McGowan v. Lufburrow, 82 Ga. 523, 9 SE 427, 14 AmSR 178.

[r] Where certain accounts were transferred to the administrator by the creditors, this was not a release which prevented them from looking to the land for the balance due them after the personalty was exhausted. Wheeler v. Floyd, 24 S. C. 413.

[s] Judgment against representative.—Where a judgment was to the knowledge of the heirs recovered against an administratrix on a note indorsed by her decedent, an attorney assuming to represent the heirs stipulating for an entry of the judgment after ninety days, the heirs were not bound by such judgment, and were not estopped from disputing the claim in a proceeding for sale of decedent's lands to pay such claim. Matter of Neufeld, 50 Misc. 215, 100 NYS 444, 5 Mills Surr. 352.

[t] Judgment confessed by representative.—Where a judgment has been confessed by an administratrix on claims well founded, the heirs must show in opposition to a rule by the judgment creditors for a sale of the property that the confession by the administratrix was made to their injury, and that their rights of defense against the claims were waived by the confession. [b] Illegal arrangement as to payment. — Where an arrangement was made between an administrator and others by which the land belonging to the estate was to be bought in at the administrator's sale by a certain person, and taken by the administrator's children in payment of a claim held by them against the estate, it was held that, although the arrangement was illegal, and the children could claim no right to the land thereunder, yet their claim was not extinguished, and a new sale to pay it should be ordered. Tenn. — Batson v. Murrell, 10 Humphr. 301, 51 AmD 707.

[a] If the debt is apparently barred the administrator applying for a sale must show some fact taking it out of the operation of the statute. Gilchrist v. Rea, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 66.

[b] Claim of representative.—It is error to grant an application of an administrator to sell lands to pay debts due the administrator, where the administrator does not establish a compliance with the statute providing that a claim held by the personal representative which accrued prior to the grant of letters must be presented within twelve months of the grant of letters, by filing them, reimbursement of a representative who has paid such claim;[81] but where the proceedings for a sale are instituted before the claim has become barred, and the effect thereof is to interrupt the period of prescription, a sale may be ordered after the time when, but for such proceedings, the claim would have been barred.[82] It has also been held that where land was sold by an administrator under order of the court to pay a mortgage thereon, the objection that the sale was without authority because the notes and mortgage had never been filed as a claim against the estate was without merit, since such failure was excused by the application of the administrator for authority to sell.[83]

[§ 1443] c. Debts Created after Death of Decedent—(1) In General. As a general rule a sale of realty can be authorized only for the payment of debts which were in existence at the time of decedent's death.[84]

[§ 1444] (2) Expenses of Administration. In accordance with the rule just stated the right to order a sale for the payment of the expenses of administration has been very generally denied,[85] verified by affidavit, in the office of the probate judge, as provided by Code § 133. Little v. Marx, 145 Ala. 620, 39 S 517.

[c] A judgment (1) is not barred by the statute because recovered some two years prior to the filing of the petition for license to sell. Lebroke v. Damon, 89 Me. 113, 35 A 1028. (2) But the rule has been applied to a judgment the lien of which has expired (Matthews v. Peterson, 150 N. C. 134, 63 SE 721), and (3) which has not been revived (Pry's App., 8 Watts (Pa.) 253).

[d] Payment of interest on mortgage.—Where on a bill in equity to subject real estate in the hands of heirs to the payment of decedent's debts it appeared that the debt was secured by mortgage, that the interest on the mortgage had been regularly paid by the mortgagor during his lifetime, and by his administrator after his death until the estate was settled and turned over to the heirs, that the mortgage was thereupon foreclosed and the property sold, and that the claim was for a deficiency upon such sale, the failure of the mortgagee to prove her claim before the commissioners did not constitute laches sufficient to bar the claim, since the payment of interest by the administrator led the mortgagee to believe that the mortgage would be assumed by the administrator and the heirs of the estate. Chewitt v. Moran, 17 Fed. 820.

[e] Heirs can plead limitations (1) against debts, to pay which the administrator petitions to sell land, as fully as they could plead it against the creditors. Kornegay v. Mayer, 135 Ala. 141, 33 S 36; Warren v. Hearne, 82 Ala. 554, 2 S 491; Black v. Elliott, 63 Kan. 211, 65 P 215, 88 AmSR 239; Matter of Knapp, 25 Misc. 133, 54 NYS 927, 28 NYCivProc 220, 2 Gibb. Surr. 581; Matthews v. Peterson, 150 N. C. 134, 63 SE 721; Brock v. Kirkpatrick, 60 S. C. 322, 38 SE 779, 85 AmSR 847. (2) "The proceeding is in effect a suit by the creditors against the heirs, claiming satisfaction out of the estate which has descended to them for a debt due from the ancestor. It does not therefore rest with the administrator to say whether the bar of the statute of limitations shall be interposed or not; he is placed in an antagonist position to the heir, and cannot therefore make any admission which shall prejudice him. His power to meddle with the real estate is derived entirely from the statute; it is a special authority derived from the order of the Court on proof of the allegation of the petition, and confers no power further than is necessary to execute the trust with which he is clothed for the benefit of the creditors. It is true, that while acting within his appropriate sphere, as the representative of the deceased, he may decline to interpose the bar of the statute to defeat a just claim; but when he lays down his character of representative of the deceased, and becomes a party litigant on behalf of the creditors, against the heirs, it would be a strange anomaly if he should be allowed to dictate the defence." Bond v. Smith, 2 Ala. 660, 663. To same effect May v. Parham, 68 Ala. 253; Fretwell v. McLemore, 52 Ala. 124; Thrash v. Sumwalt, 5 Ala. 13; McBroom v. Governor, 6 Port. (Ala.) 32; Riser v. Snoddy, 7 Ind. 442, 65 AmD 740; Skidmore v. Romaine, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 122; Bevers v. Park, 88 N. C. 456.

[f] Judgment creditors of a devisee may plead the statute although the devisee himself does not appear. Raynor v. Gordon, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 264.

[g] A bona fide purchaser from a devisee of a judgment defendant being under statute not "in any manner affected" by the lien of the judgment after being lost, being revived by scire facias so that the land cannot be reached by proceedings directly on the judgment, it for the same reason cannot be reached by an order of the orphans' court to sell lands to pay the judgment of the deceased judgment defendant. Cohen v. Tuff, 27 Del. 188, 86 A 833, AnnCas1917C 596 [aff 26 Del. 404, 84 A 946].

[h] A fraudulent grantee of a decedent may plead the statute of limitations against a debt for the payment of which a sale of the land fraudulently conveyed is asked. Syme v. Riddle, 88 N. C. 463.

[b] On the other hand in a case where a chancery decree in favor of an administrator and guardian awarded an allowance of six hundred dollars for his services and authorized him to hold the property belonging to the estate until the further order of the court, the entire estate being still before the court, it was held that the chancery court was authorized to order a sale of the real estate on a sufficient showing that the personalty was not sufficient to pay the administrator, and that it would be to the interest of the estate to sell the property or a portion thereof. Johnson v. Porterfield, 150 Ala. 532, 43 S 228.

especially where there are no debts of decedent,[86] or where the assets of the estate were sufficient to pay such costs but have been otherwise disposed of by the representative.[87] Under some statutes, however, a sale for this purpose is allowed;[88] and it is very generally recognized that where a sale is properly made for the payment of debts, the proceeds may be used for payment of the expenses of administration,[89] from which it results that such a sale is valid, even though only enough to pay expenses of administration is realized therefrom.[90]

[§ 1445] (3) Funeral Expenses. The statutes frequently permit a sale of real estate for payment of decedent's funeral expenses,[91] and the same rule has been extended to the cost of a monument.[92]

[§ 1446] (4) Inheritance Taxes. The court of probate jurisdiction is sometimes authorized by statute to order a sale of decedent's realty to pay an inheritance tax.[93]

[§ 1447] d. Secured Debts. The fact that a debt is secured is no reason why the representative may not be authorized to sell realty for the purpose of paying such debt;[94] and it has been held that realty may be sold for the purpose of paying liens thereon,[95] although the view also is taken that a sale for this purpose is not a part of the administration of the estate or within the powers of a court of probate jurisdiction.[96]

Statutes changing rule. It is competent for the law-making power to alter the rule under discussion, and accordingly there are sometimes found statutes which authorize a sale of a decedent's realty for payment of his debts, even though his personalty would be sufficient for this purpose.[6]

[§ 1450] (2) Insufficiency Due to Fault of Representative. Where the assets were originally sufficient to pay the debts, but they have been lost, wasted, or distributed by the representative in violation of his duty, the resulting insufficiency

[j] Averment of sufficiency in answer.—Where an answer avers that, on the disposal of exceptions to the account of one of the petitioners, who was the administrator of decedent and whose letters have been vacated, there will be sufficient personal property to pay all of decedent's just debts, an order to sell real estate in payment of debts will not be granted at the instance of judgment creditors. Miller's Est., 18 LancLRev (Pa.) 53.

[k] Admission of insufficiency.—Where real estate is charged with the payment of debts if the personalty is insufficient, a sale will not be decreed until the master reports that the personalty is insufficient, even though insufficiency is admitted by: (1) The executors. See Henry v. Mills, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 144, 150 ("It is not necessary, however, to lay down a positive rule on this subject").

[n] Prospect of assets.—The court in probate did not abuse its discretion in denying an application for the sale of real property specifically devised for the payment of debts, although there was no money in the hands of the executor, and no other property immediately available for their payment, where several actions were pending on causes of action in favor of the estate in one of which a judgment had been recovered for a large amount, a new trial had been denied, and it did not appear that the judgment could not be collected if affirmed. Pa.—Rose's Est., 17 Pa. Co. 514.

"Upon it being ascertained that the personalty is insufficient to pay the debts, the procedure provided by sections 6136 to 6174, Revised Statute, operates upon the res as well as upon the parties interested, and gives to the administrator the absolute right to subject the lands in the way prescribed unless advantage is taken by those interested by the interposition of a bond. The first section above cited in absolute terms requires the executor or administrator so soon as he shall ascertain that the personal estate will be insufficient to pay all the debts, etc., to apply to the probate or common pleas court for authority to sell the real estate, and then follow, in subsequent sections, minute provisions for the proper conduct of such sales. This absolute requirement is not abridged by any clause of any of the sections following. It is true, as urged by counsel for plaintiffs in error, that provision is made by sections 6173 and 6174 for the appropriation to the payment of debts of the proceeds arising from sales in partition proceedings where deficiency of assets is found to exist, but this falls very far short of a provision supplanting an application by the administrator for an order to sell by a suit by the heirs in partition. Indeed, the last clause of the last cited section distinctly neutralizes the proposition claimed. That clause is: 'Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prohibit any executor or administrator from proceeding to sell land belonging to such estate to pay any debts, when the same has been sold on partition or otherwise, or the proceeds of such sale fully distributed.' It is inconceivable to ascribe to the lawmakers a purpose to authorize a suit in partition by heirs the result of which would be to simply complicate the affairs of the estate, while at the same time the administrator is given authority, as is given by the clause above quoted, to sell to pay debts notwithstanding the sale in partition and the proceeds of the sale fully distributed." Stout v. Stout, supra.

"As it regards the question of power in the legislature, no objection is perceived to their subjecting the lands of the deceased to the payment of his debts, to the exclusion of his personal property. The legislature regulates descents, and the conveyance of real estate; to define the rights of debtor and creditor is their common duty. . . . No doubt is entertained, that the legislature of a state have power to subject the lands of a deceased person to execution, in the same manner as if he were living. The mode in which this shall be done is a question of policy, and rests in the discretion of the legislature." Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 25, 63, 10 L. ed. 873.

[a] Discretionary power is sometimes vested in the court of probate to order a sale of decedent's real estate to pay debts, whether or not there is sufficient personalty. Candee v. Candee, 87 Conn. 85, 86 A 758.

of assets does not of itself warrant a sale of the realty;[7] but the remedy is primarily upon the bond of the executor or administrator.[8] The real estate is not, however, according to the better opinion, relieved from ultimate liability, and if the creditors have not been at fault and remedies upon the representative's bond or in pursuit or recovery of the personal assets fail to furnish full redress, a sale of the real estate may be ordered at the instance of creditors for payment of the debts.[9] In this connection it has been held that the land should not have been sold until all other remedies have been exhausted;[10] but there is also authority for the view that the creditor is not bound to exhaust his remedies against the representative and his bondsmen before resorting to the realty,[11] and a fortiori the creditor is not required to go through the form of pursuing a remedy which it is apparent would result in no substantial relief.[12]

[§ 1451] (3) Insufficiency Due to Depreciation and Losses. Where the personal property, although originally sufficient for the payment of debts, has become insufficient after the death of the testator, by reason of depreciation or losses for which neither the personal representatives nor the creditors are responsible, the real estate may be sold.[13]

[§ 1452] (4) Necessity for Actual Application of Personalty. In some states no order for a sale of realty can properly be made until so much of the personal estate as has come into the representative's hands has been actually applied to the payment of the debts,[14] but in others mere proof of

"If the decedent, at the time of his death, left sufficient personal property which could have been applied to the payment of his debts and funeral expenses, in the exercise of reasonable diligence on the part of his executors or administrators, then resort cannot be had to the statutes for the sale of his real estate for the payment of his debts. In that event the personal property is the fund for the payment of his debts, and the creditors must resort to that through the executors or administrators. If they waste or squander the personal property so that it becomes insufficient for the payment of the debts, the only resort of the creditors is for them to enforce their personal responsibility, and they cannot in that case cause the real estate to be sold under the statutes referred to." Kingsland v. Murray, 133 N. Y. 170, 30 NE 845.

"It is not enough for the court to find that there has been a sufficiency of personal assets left by the decedent, but at the time of filing the petition such assets have been wasted either by the petitioning administrator or executor, or by their predecessors in office. The heirs are not to be held as sureties for the faithful performance by the administrator of his duties, nor should their right be dependent upon his integrity or negligence." Rowland v. an insufficiency of personalty is enough;[15] and it has even been held that the representative is not obliged to delay a sale of real estate until claims which more than exhaust the personal estate have been filed, if such valid claims exist.[16]

[§ 1453] (5) Existence of Sufficient Personalty in Another State. Where administration is taken out in a state in which there are creditors of decedent and real estate owned by him, the fact that he left sufficient personalty in another state to pay all his debts is no objection to an order for the sale of such realty,[17] unless the same person qualified as the representative in both jurisdictions, and distributed the personalty in the jurisdiction where it was situate, without paying the creditors in the other jurisdiction.[18]

[§ 1454] g. Sufficiency of Rents and Profits. Aside from express statute or testamentary direction, it is usually considered that the court ought not to order the sale of lands which have descended to heirs or devisees, where the rents and profits thereof will satisfy within a reasonable time, the debts which the personalty is insufficient to pay.[19]

[§ 1455] h. Account of Administration. It is not usually considered necessary that an account of the administration should be rendered and a final adjudication be had upon it before the court can make an order for a sale of real estate,[20] although there is some authority for the view that an accounting is necessary,[21] at least where the sale is sought for the purpose of providing funds to pay expenses of administration.[22]

Where an accounting is pending, an order of sale may properly be delayed until an adjudication upon the account, for such adjudication furnishes the best method of ascertaining that there is a necessity for the sale.[23]

[§ 1456] i. Effect of Promise to Pay Out of Personalty. Where one promises, for a valuable consideration, to pay a debt out of his personal estate at his decease, without a specific limitation to that estate alone, and the personal estate is insufficient to pay the debt, the realty may be resorted to.[24]

[§ 1457] 3. For Payment of Legacies. The court has no inherent authority to order a sale of decedent's real estate for the payment of a legacy, even though the personal fund has been exhausted;[25] and this has been held to be true even though the legacy in question was given pursuant to tes-

tator's promise to compensate by will for services rendered during his lifetime.[26] But where legacies are charged on land by the will, the land may be ordered sold for their payment;[27] and the same is true where the will evidences the testator's intent that the legacies should be paid from the land if necessary, even though there be no express charge thereon.[28] In a case where a judgment was recovered against an executor for the amount of a legacy, it was held that an order declaring the judgment a lien on the land belonging to the estate was insufficient to afford complete relief, so that an order requiring a sale of the land to pay such legacy was proper.[29]

Statutes authorizing the sale of realty to pay legacies when the personalty is insufficient for this purpose have been exacted in some jurisdictions.[30]

[§ 1458] 4. For Distribution. In many jurisdictions the court has power to authorize a sale of decedent's real property for the purpose of partition and distribution, where it is not susceptible of a division in kind, or the parties in interest will not consent to an adjustment;[31] but it has been held that a right to subject the land to sale for the purpose of equalizing a previous distribution of the personal estate among the legatees cannot arise either from the fact of the unequal distribution or from a verbal agreement between the parties,[32] and also that a sale of realty to equalize advancements cannot be ordered before the personalty is exhausted.[33] Neither is a sale authorized merely for the purpose of preventing a partition.[34]

[§ 1459] 5. Effect of Testamentary Provisions. As a general rule, the court should not order a sale of property when there is a power of sale in the will under which the representative may act,[35] but circumstances may arise under which a sale by order of court may be proper notwithstanding the fact that the will confers such a power.[36] A testamentary provision for the raising of a fund to pay debts by the hire of certain property has been held not to preclude a sale of such property under order of court where this was necessary for the payment of debts;[37] but in an English case where a testator directed money to be raised for the purposes of his will by mortgage of part of his real estate, the court declined to direct a sale, although the master found that the money could be more advantageously raised in that way.[38] Where a testator directs that his debts are paid from the sales of his unproductive property, an order directing the executor to sell property, a part of which is productive, will not be reversed on appeal, where the sale is not for payment of debts alone, but for payment of taxes and large expenses of administration.[39]

"All of the statutes relating to the sale of the real property of a decedent for the payment of his debts have been passed to provide a way, where one does not otherwise exist, to enable general creditors to secure payment of their claims out of such property when there is an insufficient amount of personal assets. It is not intended that such statutes shall take the place of adequate testamentary provision. If the necessity for the proceeding does not exist, jurisdiction under the statutes does not exist, or at least should not be exercised. The statutes do not contemplate the exercise of jurisdiction to sell the real property of a decedent when prior to the commencement of the proceeding there has been a sale under a valid power contained in the will. It does not matter in such case whether the power of sale is imperative or discretionary." Personeni v. Goodale, 199 N. Y. 323, 325, 92 NE 754.

[a] Illustration.—Under a will directing the executor on the death of the life tenants to sell the land without restrictions as to the manner of sale, the chancellor properly refused to direct the executor as to how the land should be sold. Morehead v. France, 153 Ky. 44, 154 SW 378.

[b] Terms of will.—The power of the court to order a sale is affected by the provisions of the will only when it expressly gives power to the executor to sell "without application to the Orphans' Court." Brooks v. Bergner, 83 Md. 352, 35 A 98.

[c] Implied power.—Under a statute providing that before the surrogate can make a decree of sale he must find that the property "is not subject to a valid power of sale for the payment of" the debts the surrogate cannot make a decree of sale if there is an actual and valid power, although it is implied and not express. Coogan v. Ockershausen, 55 N. Y. Super. 286, 18 NYSt 366 [aff 11 NYCivProc 315].

[d] Referring sale to power.—Where a trust deed with power of sale was probated as part of a will, and the trustee who was also sole executor obtained an order of sale which was invalid and sold the land five years thereafter, executing a deed as executor but not reporting the sale to the probate court, the sale should be referred to the power in the deed, and not to the order of the court. Matthews v. McDade, 72 Ala. 377. To same effect Purser v. Short, 58 Ill. 477.

[e] If land is expressly charged with debts (1) or is devised subject to the payment of debts a license to sell will not be granted. Davis v. Hoover, 112 Ind. 423, 14 NE 468; Smith v. Coup, 6 Dem. Surr. (N. Y.) 45; Rosenfield's Est., 10 NYCivProc 201, 5 Dem. Surr. 251. (2) But if the lands so charged are not sufficient to pay the debts the court may order other lands to be sold. Kinney v. Knoebel, 51 Ill. 112; Duncan v. Gainey, 108 Ind. 579, 9 NE 470.

[f] The manner of the exercise of the discretion vested in executors by a testamentary power to sell and convert property into cash may be reviewed by the courts on behalf of the interested parties. Matter of Vom Saal, 82 Misc. 531, 145 NYS 307.

[g] A contrary view appears to be entertained in New Hampshire. Harris v. Ingalls, 74 N. While no license from the court for the purpose is necessary in the absence of a statute requiring it (Going v. Emery, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 107, 26 AmD 645), it seems advisable, in view of the statutory provision on the subject in this state, that the plaintiffs should procure a license for making the sale of the land situated here. Johnson v. Porterfield, 150 Ala. 532, 43 S 228.

Direction for gradual settlement of firm business. Where a deceased partner's will provided that the business of the firm should be settled gradually, so as to not injure the estate or prejudice the surviving partner, a delay of five years in the settlement of the firm affairs by the surviving partner did not justify an order directing the deceased's executors to sell the deceased's interest in the firm, there being no evidence that the decedent's executors or legatees were dissatisfied with the management of the estate.[42]

[a] Proceedings must be in conformity to statute.—Hutchinson's Est., 10 Pa. Co. 592.

[b] The proper motion is that the personal representative show cause why he should not apply for a sale. Titlow's Est., 2 Pa. Dist. 512, 13 Pa. Co. 445.

[c] Indemnity to representative.—Where the testator's interest is merely reversionary and contingent and possibly of trifling value, the administratrix should not be compelled to institute proceedings without indemnity, since the sale might not bring enough to pay costs and expenses. Kamerer v. Kamerer, 281 Ill. 587, 117 NE 1027 (the same is true as to an heir's interest, which is of trifling value, and which it is sought to have the administrator sell for payment of the heirs' debts).

[d] Time for proceeding.—(1) No definite rule can be laid down as to the time within which a creditor must initiate proceedings to compel a personal representative to proceed to subject realty to the payment of debts. Ferguson v. Scott, 49 Miss. 500. (2) A creditor may at any time institute such proceedings and require the personal representative to show cause why he should not be ordered to sell the real estate, and the statute expressly prohibits him from assigning as cause "that the time within which he is allowed to sell the same has expired." Ferguson v. Broome, 1 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 10.

[e] A single creditor may proceed by action in the superior court to compel the personal representative to sell the debtor's land to pay debts. Yarborough v. Moore, 151 N. C. 116, 65 SE 763.

[f] A foreign creditor may file a bill against the personal representative to compel him to obtain an order to sell real estate, although there is realty in the state where such creditor resides. Bird v. Key, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 366.

[g] Parties to proceeding.—In an action by a creditor of the estate to compel the executor to sell real estate to pay debts, the devisee of the real estate is a necessary party, and where he was a nonresident, and was made a party defendant, but was never legally served with process, and did not appear, a judgment in plaintiff's favor must be reversed. Holly v. Gibbons, 176 N. Y. 520, 68 NE 889, 98 AmSR 694.

[h] If there is not enough money in the estate to pay the costs, the representative will not be required to advance them, but if a creditor is willing to advance the costs or indemnify the representative, he will be ordered to proceed. Kitchenman's Est., 15 Phila. (Pa.) 519.

[i] Dismissal of a creditor's petition for an accounting with the statement that the proceeding was barred by limitations is not a bar to the maintenance of an action by the creditor to compel the executor to sell real estate to pay the debt. a creditor has this right only after his debt has been acknowledged,[57] or his claim registered after being probated and allowed.[58]

A demand on the representative has been held not a prerequisite to the exercise by a creditor of his rights in the premises.[59]

The petitioning creditor obtains no preference over other creditors whose claims are of equal dignity.[60]

Creditors may lose their rights in this respect by a lack of diligence in enforcing them or by waiving them and trying to secure payment in other ways.[61]

[a] Such an application may be made by: (1) The widow when money is due her from the estate. Martin's Est., 6 Pa. Dist. 58, 19 Pa. Co. 209. (2) One whose claim against the executor for services to the estate has been allowed by the court. Cout's Est., 87 Cal. 480, 25 P 685. (3) A state hospital, for the treatment of the indigent insane, having a claim against decedent. Matter of Buffalo State Hospital, 47 Misc. 33, 95 NYS 209, 4 Mills Surr. 577. (4) Where a mortgagor gave to an attorney money to pay the mortgage, and the party receiving it converted it to his own use, and for years continued to pay interest to the mortgagee, he became the attorney of the mortgagor, and having misapplied it became indebted to him in the amount thereof, and, on the death of both, the executors of the mortgagors were creditors and entitled to maintain a proceeding for the sale of the agent's real estate to pay the debt. Matter of Lowerre, 48 Misc. 317, 96 NYS 764, 35 NYCivProc 259, 5 Mills Surr. 135.

[b] A prima facie showing that one has a claim against the estate is sufficient to enable him to maintain a proceeding for a sale of the real estate. Martin's Est., 6 Pa. Dist. 58, 19 Pa. Co. 209.

[c] Creditors "other than by mortgage."—Under a statute providing that a creditor other than a "creditor by a mortgage" may petition for disposition of decedent's realty, creditors whose claim was secured by a second mortgage at time of decedent's death, but who lost their security by reason of foreclosure of the first mortgage, were other than "creditors by a mortgage," entitled to relief. Matter of Ries, 182 App. Div. 296, 169 NYS 426.

[d] Creditors living in another state may proceed in Tennessee to have lands situated in the latter state sold to satisfy their debt notwithstanding there is property of decedent in the state where the creditors live. Bird v. Key, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 366.

[e] Mortgage creditors of a succession, although it is insolvent, are not bound to wait. They may require a sale of the mortgaged property for cash, provided its appraised value is obtained, and their wish must always prevail over that of the other creditors. Ogden's Succ., 10 Rob. (La.) 457; Porter's Succ., 5 Rob. (La.) 96.

[f] Legacy in payment for services.—An agreement by decedent to compensate a certain person for services to be rendered, by a legacy, does not constitute such person a creditor entitled to ask for the sale of lands for payment where such legacy has been made. Markley's Est., 20 Phila. (Pa.) 175.

[g] A creditor who has assigned his interest in a debt against decedent cannot institute proceedings in his own name for the sale of land, but the assignee, who is the real creditor, must institute the proceedings in his own name. Butler v. Emmett, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 12.

[h] A judgment creditor (1) whose judgment is a subsisting lien upon the real estate as against the heirs at law cannot institute proceedings before the surrogate to compel a sale of the real estate for the satisfaction of the judgment. Butler v. Emmett, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 12. (2) A judgment creditor is not entitled to file a petition in chancery for the sale of personal property belonging to decedent's estate, his remedy at law by levy being adequate and complete. Howell v. Randle, 171 Ala. 451, 54 S 563 (holding, however, that where an administrator joined in the request of a judgment creditor of decedent for a sale of personal property to pay debts, the petition would not be dismissed for lack of the judgment creditor's capacity to sue).

[i] One whose claim is for funeral expenses is not a "creditor of the decedent," and therefore cannot maintain a proceeding for the sale of decedent's land to pay debts. Van Orden v. Krouse, 89 Hun 1, 34 NYS 1004; Matter of Corwin, 10 Misc. 196, 31 NYS 426, 1 Gibb. Surr. 167.

[j] Claim not constituting debt.—Where a husband and wife contracted to give plaintiffs an option for six months on a certain tract of land lying outside the state, and within six months, but after the death of the husband, plaintiff elected to buy, but the wife and heirs of the husband refused to convey, it was held that as plaintiffs had not elected to buy during the husband's life, their claim for damages for refusal to convey was not a debt due from the husband, entitling them to sue for a sale of reality to pay debts under the statute. McGaw v. Gortner, 96 Md. 489, 54 A 133.

[k] Protection of unsecured creditors.—A petition for the sale of realty will be granted to protect the rights of the unsecured creditors, although the petitioners represent but a small proportion of the total indebtedness, and the executors will be directed to sell sufficient of the real estate to pay the balance due them, notwithstanding the executors have made every effort to sell at private sale, unless an agreement is filed, signed by all parties, that the lien of all the unsecured debts may be continued. Lukens' Est., 10 Pa. Dist. 118.

[l] Creditors of the executor.—While an executor is entitled to reimburse himself by a sale of real estate, for money borrowed and used by him in paying claims against the estate, his creditor has no such right. Smith v. Hayward, 5 OhS&CP 462, 5 OhNP 501.

[m] A receiver may be appointed to take charge of, put in marketable condition, and sell, timber belonging to the estate lying on the lands of a stranger, subject to his purchase money lien, at the instance of creditors, when the personal representative has refused so to do. Buskirk v. Peck, 57 W. Va. 360, 50 SE 432.

[n] Effect of bond for payment of debts.—The statutory right of creditors to have the real property sold for payment of their claims by proceedings in the probate court is not destroyed nor affected by the executor's giving a bond as residuary legatee for payment of debts and legacies. Lafferty v. People's Sav. Bank, 76 Mich. 35, 43 NW 34.

[o] Time for proceeding. — A creditor may institute a suit for the sale of realty if the personal representative fails to institute such a suit within six months after his qualification. Reinhardt v. Reinhardt, 21 W. Va. 76.

[p] Chancery has no inherent jurisdiction to decree a sale of land at the suit of a creditor unless he has some specific lien thereon, or it is specifically burdened by the testator with the debts. McPike v. Wells, 54 Miss. 136.

[q] A clerk of court cannot grant an order of sale on application of a creditor. Mason v. Fuller, 12 La. Ann. 68.

57. Winn's Succ., 30 La. Ann. 702.

58. Cheairs v. Cheairs, 81 Miss. 662, 33 S 414, 60 LRA 549.

[a] A creditor who has not obtained both an allowance of his claim by the administrator and an approval by the probate judge cannot maintain a proceeding in the probate court for the sale of land; and it seems that a proceeding commenced before such approval cannot be cured by a subsequent approval. Danzey v. Swinney, 7 Tex. 617.

[b] Appeal from allowance.—A creditor whose claim has been allowed may bring an action, under the statute, to subject real estate or other assets not inventoried to sale, although an appeal has been taken from the allowance of his claim. Richter v. Leiby, 99 Wis. 512, 75 NW 82.

[a] When right not lost.—A decedent owed a certain amount for which a creditor held collateral. The account of the administrator recognized the claim as valid but stated that the creditor had agreed to compromise for half the amount of the claim if the collateral could be made available, otherwise his claim to be for the full amount. Pursuant to a decree, stating the creditor's claim at the amount agreed on for compromise, and directing a pro rata distribution of the assets, the creditor received payment on account of his claim and gave a receipt for his "distributive share" of his "claim against said estate." The collateral failed to realize enough to pay the amount due the creditor. It was held that neither the decree of distribution nor the receipt given by the creditor estopped him from resorting to the real estate for the collection of the whole amount remaining due him upon the full amount of his claim. Mead v. Jenkins, 38 Hun 340 [aff 109 N. Y. 661 mem, 17 NE 868].

[b] Loss of right to enforce claim against part of land.—Where the creditor who petitions for leave to sell land omits certain land of decedent from his notice of lis pendens, and thus, under the statute, loses his right to enforce his claim against such land, the remaining land should be released from liability in proportion to the value of the omitted land. In re Bingham, 127 N. Y. 296, 27 NE 1055.

terested in the estate may apply for an order of sale in case the executor or administrator fails to make application therefor;[62] accordingly it has been held that in a proper case application may be made by the heirs,[63] the legatees,[64] or the widow.[65] It has been held that a suit to sell realty for the purpose of paying debts and saving the personalty from the demands of creditors for the benefit of the estate can be instituted only by one who as heir, devisee, or purchaser has an interest in the real estate proposed to be sold, and also an interest in the personal estate which it is proposed to save by the sale.[66] While the guardian of a minor may duly apply for a license to sell land in a suitable case, this standing is not so readily accorded to a mere guardian ad litem.[67] Where a will provided that a certain attorney should be retained in the settlement of the estate, he was not entitled to prepare and file a petition for sale of decedent's realty and to have it signed by the executor against the latter's wishes.[68]

[§ 1464] D. Property or Interests Subject to Sale[69]—1. In General. As a general rule under the statutes all a decedent's real estate may be sold for the payment of his debts,[70] and this includes lands acquired by the estate after decedent's death.[71] Where decedent had the right under his father's will to purchase the interests of other remaindermen in land in which decedent had a remainder, within a certain time after the life tenant's death, and decedent elected by his will to purchase the interest of a deceased remainderman, the representatives of such remainderman being made defendants, decedent's administrators in proceedings

"That the debts shall be paid is the injunction of the law. . . . If, then, the debts of the estate appear to exceed in amount the available means at hand, it may fairly be said to appear that a sale is necessary; and, if real estate is to be sold, the court or judge may properly consult the recitals of the petition as to the condition of the real estate to determine whether all or only a portion should be sold, and, if only a portion, then what particular portion." Plains Land, etc., Co. v. Lynch, 38 Mont. 271, 283, 99 P 847, 129 AmSR 645.

[a] The heirs have only a residuary interest in the real property of their ancestor, and it is considered as belonging to his estate for the purpose of a sale to pay his debts. Lange's Succ., 46 La. Ann. 1017, 15 S 404; Smith's Succ., 9 La. Ann. 107.

[b] Interests of minors.—The right of a court of probate or equity to order a sale of a decedent's real estate, where the statute gives due authority, is not affected by the fact that a minor is interested in the property as heir or devisee. Lange's Succ., 46 La. Ann. 1017, 15 S 404; Leverett v. Harris, 7 Mass. 292. See also Whitman v. Fisher, 74 Ill. 147 (such power exists only when expressly given by statute).

But compare Evans v. Brown, 5 Beav. 114, 49 Reprint 520 (as against the lord claiming by escheat, land is assets for payment of debts).

[f] Mines or interests in mines belonging to the estate may be sold. Byrne's Est., 112 Cal. 176, 44 P 467.

The proper adjustment among the heirs is matter for separate suit. Maxwell v. Smith, 86 Tenn. 539, 8 SW 340.

[h] Where a valid sale has been made under order of court, so as to divest both heirs and creditors of any further claim, any order made afterward to sell the same land would not have the support of a rightful jurisdiction. to sell the estate to satisfy debts could consummate his election to purchase by paying the stipulated price out of the estate, and then sell the land for debts together with the rest of the estate, it being unnecessary to institute a separate proceeding to vest title in themselves.[72] A proceeding by judgment creditors for the sale of real property for the payment of debts has been held proper, although decedent's real property had previously been sold in partition by his heirs, the proceeds of the partition sale standing in place of the land.[73] A bond held by a decedent at his death, although not yet due, is liable to be sold under a decree in equity to raise funds for the payment of his debts.[74]

[§ 1465] 2. Reversions or Remainders. An estate in reversion or remainder may be decreed to be sold for the payment of debts.[75]

[§ 1466] 3. Interest as Cotenant. Where a decedent and others were cotenants of property, and decedent's interest survives his death, such interest may be sold in the course of administration of his estate.[76] But no more than decedent's interest can pass by such a sale,[77] and if the property is divisible, it should be partitioned and the sale made of the portion set off to decedent's estate.[78] Where the rule of survivorship deprives decedent of all interest at his death, nothing remains which can be sold as a part of his estate.[79]

[§ 1467] 4. Inchoate or Equitable Titles or Interests—a. In General. An inchoate or equitable title in decedent passing to his heirs or devisees may be sold under a decree of the probate court.[80] Thus the court may order the sale of property which was held in trust for decedent,[81] or his interest as purchaser in an executory contract of sale.[82] But where there is at most a slight or merely an ap-

[b] A parol contract for the purchase of land, which has been taken out of the statute of frauds, by part performance, is subject to sale for payment of the purchaser's debts. Richmond v. Foote, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 244.

[c] Inchoate right of purchaser at probate sale.—Where a sale of lands under an order of the probate court had been made and confirmed, the purchaser, although he had not paid the purchase money, had an interest in the land which, on his death, the court could order to be sold for the payment of his debts. Inman v. Gibbs, 47 Ala. 305.

[d] Where the administrator pays the balance of the purchase price of property and takes a conveyance in the name of the heirs, the court has no jurisdiction subsequently to order a sale of the land. Jones v. Woodstock Iron Co., 95 Ala. 551, 10 S 635.

[e] A penal bond to make title on the performance of certain conditions parent equity, and no really valuable interest in decedent or his heirs, the court should refuse to order a sale.[83]

[§ 1468] b. Interests in Public Lands. As a rule the right to perfect a decedent's inchoate title to or interest in public land goes to his heirs, and the executor or administrator cannot sell under order of court the patent, or the lands which have been patented, to the heirs.[84] There is, however, some authority for a contrary view,[85] and where decedent's right to the land became complete before his death, although a patent had not actually been issued, his interest in the land, or the certificate evidencing it, may be sold for his debts.[86]

[§ 1469] 5. Leased Property and Leasehold Estates. The fact that realty is leased for a certain period does not preclude its sale,[87] although such sale must, of course, be subject to the lease;[88] and conversely, a leasehold estate of decedent may be sold to pay debts.[89] It has also been held that the

by the obligee does not create an equitable interest in the land which the probate court on the death of the obligee can order to be sold for the payment of his debts. Thus where a person who claimed to have a right of entry under the preëmption laws of the United States executed a bond to decedent in the penal sum of ten thousand dollars binding himself, on condition that decedent would establish the claim and pay to the United States the purchase money for the land, to deliver to decedent, his heirs, and assigns a good and sufficient deed of all his right and title to one half of such land, it was held that decedent did not take such an estate or interest in the land as could be sold by order of the orphans', court, although the condition of the bond was performed by decedent. Brown v. Chambers, 12 Ala. 697.

[f] A purchaser at a sheriff's sale who dies before taking a deed acquires no such interest in the premises as can be the subject of an administrator's sale. Blodgett v. Perry, 97 Mo. 263, 10 SW 891, 10 AmSR 307.

[g] Rescission of contract.—If an executory contract for the sale of land is rescinded for nonpayment of the purchase money after the death of the purchaser, his interest ceases and no sale can be ordered for the payment of his debts, although his heir, whom he left in possession of the land, obtained a deed to it from the vendor after the rescission. Goodwin v. Nelin, 2 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 258, 4 Transcr. A. 369, 35 HowPr 402.

[h] On the other hand it has been held that a statute authorizing the orphans' court to order the sale of lands, tenements, hereditaments, or real estate of a decedent, if necessary to pay his debts, did not include an equitable interest under a contract of sale. Hendrickson v. Hendrickson, 41 N. J. Eq. 375 [aff 42 N. J. Eq. 657, 9 A 742].

court may, in settling an estate, direct a sale of a mineral leasehold separate from a sale of the fee, if that course would be more advantageous to the estate.[90] Under a statute providing that specific legacies should not be sold in any case unless it becomes necessary to pay debts, where a sale of a leasehold for twenty years specifically devised, by the administrator de bonis non, to pay debts, was void, he could not again sell it after the devisee had conveyed her interest therein, unless it was thereafter needed to pay debts.[91]

[§ 1470] 6. Vendor's Liens. A vendor's lien is not an asset which is the subject of sale to pay debts.[92]

[§ 1471] 7. Franchises. The right to the use of a franchise is the property of the grantee, and it may be sold for the payment of his debts where the use continues for the public good as originally designed by the grant.[93]

[§ 1472] 8. Crops and Products of Realty. It has been held that a crop upon decedent's estate may be decreed to be sold in such manner as may seem reasonable and the interest of the estate may require,[94] but that oil produced from wells sunk in real estate of decedent cannot be sold for the payment of debts, but the proper remedy is a sale of the land itself.[95]

[§ 1473] 9. Fixtures. The orphans' court has no power to decree a separation of fixtures from the realty and a sale of the fixtures as personalty.[96]

[§ 1474] 10. Lands Devised by Decedent. The fact that realty has been devised by decedent does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to order a sale thereof,[97] although a different rule is sometimes established by statute, under which the remedy, in case the devisee has taken possession of the land devised, is by execution for his contribution toward payment of debts.[98]

[§ 1475] 11. Lands Conveyed by Heir or Devisee. In some states a bona fide sale and conveyance of land belonging to a decedent by the heir or devisee is held to give the purchaser a title thereto superior to the rights of decedent's creditors, whose sole remedy thereafter is an action against the heir or devisee for payment of the debt;[99] but under the general policy of modern legislation the land of a decedent remains subject to a lien or a cloud upon the title pending the full administration of his estate or for a fixed period, and it remains during such time liable to be sold for the payment of the decedent's debts or such claims as the statute may have included notwithstanding any sale by the heir or devisee.[1]

[§ 1476] 12. Property Not Owned by Dece-

90. Baker v. Royal Lead, etc., Co. 107 SW 704, 707, 32 KyL 982 ("The right of an owner of a fee to lease or sell and convey the mineral right in the property absolutely, while retaining the fee in himself or disposing thereof to others, is now well recognized. An authority directly in point upon this question is the case of Ames v. Ames, 160 Ill. 600, 43 NE 593, wherein the court says: 'The right of the owners of land to convey the coal and mineral rights underlying the land, and reserve the surface absolutely in fee, has long been recognized. When such conveyance is made, two separate estates exist, and each is distinct. Each may be conveyed by deed, each may be devised under a will; each will pass to the heir under the statute of descent, and each is subject to taxation. . . . Two separate estates and interests being in existence, in principle there can be no difficulty in recognizing titles. If these two separate interests and titles were united in one person . . . the owner would have a right, to sever the two estates by deed or devise. Where the owner would have that right there is no inherent difficulty in a court of chancery severing the two estates in a partition proceeding, where it is rendered necessary in the interest of justice, and decreeing the dominant estate to one and the servient estate to another.' It will thus be seen that under the authority of the opinion from which we have just quoted the learned chancellor was fully justified in directing a sale of the leasehold separate and apart from the sale of the fee, if by so doing a more advantageous sale could be made for the benefit of the estate").

[a] A previous partition sale does not divest the surrogate of power to order a sale to pay decedent's debts within three years after the dent at Time of Death.[2] The probate court has ordinarily no jurisdiction to order a sale of land to which decedent had no title whatever at the date of his death,[3] and whether such sale is through fraud or mistake it is void and must be set aside.[4] But land which a decedent has in his lifetime conveyed in fraud of creditors may, as a general rule, be reached and made available by sale for the payment of creditors, the proceeding usually involving a judicial inquiry into the question of fraud as well as the necessity of resorting to the land,[5] although a sale will not be ordered where it would interfere granting of letters of administration. Hall v. Partridge, 10 HowPr (N. Y.) 188.

[b] Sale after time limited.—(1) Land aliened by an heir after the time limited cannot be sold by the administrator to pay the ancestor's debts. Murchison v. Whitted, 87 N. C. 465; Badger v. Daniel, 79 N. C. 372. (2) Nor can the administrator sell land aliened by the heir within such time if the alienee, after the time has elapsed, has conveyed to a purchaser for value and without notice. Murchison v. Whitted, 87 N. C. 465.

2. Land acquired by estate after decedent's death see supra § 1464, text and note 71.

Property held or claimed adversely see infra § 1478.

3. See cases infra note 4.

"A decree in such a case could not, and would not, be conclusive or res adjudicata against the owner of such property unless he became a party to the proceeding and participated in the litigation and allowed the judgment to become final under the statute. In such case he might be estopped raising the same question." Douglas v. Douglas, 22 Ida. 336, 347, 125 P 796.

[a] Condemnation during decedent's lifetime.—The probate court cannot direct a sale of decedent's right, title, and interest in an entire tract of land, part of which had been taken by condemnation, and decedent's claim for damages does not pass to the purchaser at such a sale. In re Southern New England R. Co., 39 R. I. 468, 98 A 99.

[b] Separate property of married woman.—The county court had no jurisdiction to order a sale of the separate property of a married woman, who predeceased her husband, as a part of the administration of the husband's estate. Vivion v. Nicholson, 54 Tex. Civ. A. 43, 116 SW 386.

[c] Sale instigated by true owner.—The rule stated in the text has been applied, although the widow who was the true owner, supposed the property belonged to her husband's estate and instigated the sale. Paul v. Squibb, 12 Pa. 296.

[d] Although the petition prays the sale of an entire tract if it is found by the court that the decedent owned part only of the tract it should have that part only appraised and sold. Ewing v. Higby, 7 Oh. 198, 28 AmD 633 (where the prayer was for the sale of an entire tract, but subsequently one fourth thereof was decreed to another person, and thereafter the court received the appraisement of an undivided three quarters of the tract only, and, reciting it, ordered all to be sold, this showed that the court meant all appraised, all belonging to the heirs after deducting the fourth interest of the other person).

[e] Conveyance not recorded until after grantor's death.—Although a conveyance of land made in trust to secure an existing debt and future advances is not recorded until after the grantor's death, the title vests in the grantee as against creditors of decedent who did not attach the property during his life; and the land cannot be sold for the payment of decedent's debts. Edwards v. Barnes, 167 Mass. 205, 45 NE 351.

[f] Property as to which decedent had power of appointment.—Where the real estate was placed in the hands of a trustee to be conveyed to decedent's appointee or in failure of an appointment to her heirs at law, and she died without making an appointment, it was held that as she had no legal title to the property it could not be sold in the ordinary course of administration, under a license, for the payment of her debts. Coverdale v. Aldrich, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 391.

[g] Proof sufficient to show ownership.—On an application for the sale of lands to pay debts, proof of decedent's continuous occupancy, with open acts of ownership for more than twenty years, is sufficient proof of ownership in the absence of evidence that he did not enter or hold of his own right. Meadows v. Meadows, 78 Ala. 240.

[a] Illustration.—A mother, who had inherited from her husband an undivided one third of a farm in fee simple, contracted with her children and grandchildren, who had inherited an undivided two thirds of the farm, the children to give the mother their interest during her life, or as long as she remained a widow, she to have the profits for her support and the improvement of the farm, and to pay all demands that might come against the estate, taxes, etc., and at her death or remarriage the farm, together with its appurtenances, was to "revert" to the legal heirs equally. It was held that inasmuch as the two-thirds interest of the children and grandchildren was theirs in fee simple, subject to the mother's life interest under the contract, the word "revert," if used solely in connection with that portion, would be unnecessary, and the parties' intention was that the farm as a whole should revert to the legal heirs equally, the word "revert" being used in the sense of "go" or "pass," and hence the mother's one-third interest could not after her death be sold to pay debts of her estate. Warrum v. White, 171 Ind. 574, 86 NE 959.

[b] Land belonging to representative.—In order to set aside a sale of lands belonging to the administrator on the ground that they were included in the conveyance by mistake, it must be shown that the parties did not intend the deed to operate as a conveyance in the personal as well as representative capacity of the administrator. McRae, 91 Wis. 226, 64 NW 889. But compare Rhem v. Tull, 35 N. C. 57 (statute not permitting sale of land under such circumstances).

[b] Either actual or constructive fraud sufficient.—A license to sell is permitted under the statute, whether such conveyance was merely fraudulent as to creditors or made with actual premeditated fraud. Westcott v. McDonald, 22 Me. 402.

[c] It is only by operation of the statute that an administrator, upon recovery of property fraudulently conveyed by decedent, may transmit the title of decedent as if a fraudulent conveyance had not been made. Stockwell v. Shalit, 204 Mass. 270, 90 NE 570.

[d] Voluntary conveyance to widow.—An administrator de bonis non is entitled to an order for the sale of land voluntarily conveyed by decedent to his widow for life, which is necessary to pay debts, although the widow is the principal creditor. Barris v. Emmons, 172 Mich. 590, 139 NW 872.

[e] Where creditors procure the setting aside of a deed of decedent on the ground that it is fraudulent as against them, the administrator may treat the property thus uncovered as assets of the estate and sell the same under order of court. Byrd v. Hall, 227 Fed. 537, 142 CCA 169; St. Francis Mill Co. v. Sugg, 169 Mo. 130, 69 SW 359 [dist Zoll v. Soper, 75 Mo. 460; Hall v. Callahan, 66 Mo. 316; George v. Williamson, 26 Mo. 190, 72 AmD 203]. But see Schultz's Succ., 39 La. Ann. 505, 2 S 47 (setting aside of conveyance does not reinvest succession with such title as a purchaser from the admiinstrator will be compelled to accept).

[f] Proceedings by representative.—The administrator cannot, in a petition to sell real estate to pay debts, have a conveyance by his intestate set aside as in fraud of creditors.

with the rights of innocent purchasers.[6]

[§ 1477] 13. Land Held by Decedent in Trust. The court should not order a sale of property held by decedent merely in trust and not in his own right.[7]

[§ 1478] 14. Property Held or Claimed Adversely to Decedent. The court should not order a sale of property which is held by a person claiming a title adverse to decedent,[8] but the representative must first recover possession.[9] So also, if there is a clear outstanding legal title adverse to the estate, the court may refuse an order of sale,[10] although if there is reasonable cause for doubt, the proper course is to permit the sale and let the question be tested by the court having jurisdiction of the subject matter.[11] When at the time of his death the legal title to real estate was in decedent, his personal representative may rightfully treat it as his property, and if necessary for the payment of debts petition for its sale, and whoever challenges his right to sell may fairly be charged with the burden of proof;[12] but on the other hand, when the legal title was not in decedent, and the representative seeks to subject to the payment of decedent's debts property which apparently belongs to another, the burden of proving that decedent had an interest in such property is upon the representative.[13]

There can be no disseizin of the representative so as to prevent him from selling under an order of court, because, strictly speaking, he had no seizin.[14]

Sifford v. Cutler, 244 Ill. 234, 91 NE 428, 135 AmSR 326, 18 AnnCas 36.

[g] Where the personal estate is sufficient to pay all debts and charges, except for certain debts secured by a mortgage on decedent's lands, there is no occasion for and no right in the administrator to subject to the payment of such mortgage debts other lands conveyed by his intestate during his lifetime, on the allegation of fraud as against creditors. McCall v. Pixley, 48 Oh. St. 379, 27 NE 887.

[h] Where the widow and administratrix had joined her deceased husband in a simulated transfer of property subject to a certain mortgage to a nominal buyer, who formally recognized the mortgage in the transfer, she could not afterward have the property sold as a part of her husband's succession, to the prejudice of the mortgage creditor. Tabary's Succ., 31 La. Ann. 409.

[i] Sale for full value.—Where decedent, against whom docketed judgments existed, sold land at its value, the probate court has no power to order a sale of such land by the personal representative to pay the claims of the judgment creditors. Heck v. Williams, 79 N. C. 437.

B procured the loan but died before executing a deed to A. It was held that the land was subject to administration and sale as B's estate for the purpose of paying the mortgage debt, although all the other tenants, who were her heirs, and conveyed to A, also an heir, in accordance with the original agreement. "The real estate in question is not in the custody or control of the appellant but in that of third parties who hold under recorded deeds, and we can find no such power given to administrators de bonis non by statute as is claimed here. The appellant asks for license to sell ten thousand dollars' worth of real estate standing in the name of third parties in order to pay a legacy of one thousand dollars. This is far beyond his domain. If the title is to be attacked it should be by the party in interest, the Kittery Parish, and the remedy should be sought by bill in equity." Walker v. Follett, supra.

[a] Possession of heirs.—Where the heirs of an intestate, on his death, enter into possession of land which he owned, such possession is in their own right and is adverse to that of an administrator subsequently appointed, within a statute providing that an administrator must first recover possession before he can sell the property of his intestate held adversely by a third person. "The fact that there were conflicting claims to the land, if in fact there were such conflicting claims, at the time of the sale by the administrator of Perkins, did not affect the right of the administrator to sell." Evans v. Ashe, 50 Tex. Civ. A. 54, 68, 108 SW 398, 1190.

[a] If the sale would be made at a disadvantage by reason of a controversy over the title, it is proper to stay further proceedings until the parties have had an opportunity of determining the title in a court of competent jurisdiction; but if the creditors insist upon selling all of the interest of decedent after proper time has been allowed for instituting a suit to determine the title in another court, the sale will be ordered. Hewitt v. Hewitt, 3 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 265.

[b] The orphans' court cannot try title (1) to land in a proceeding for a sale to pay debts, so far as to conclude third persons who may have an interest in it adverse to the estate. Liddel v. McVickar, 11 N. J. L. 44, 19 AmD 369; Swackhamer v. Kline, 25 N. J. Eq. 503. (2) But this does not mean that the court may not ascertain the real estate of which decedent died seized, so far as to enable it to inform purchasers what the administrator is ordered to sell. This power is necessarily implied in the duty cast upon the court by statute "to hear and examine the allegations and proofs of the executor or administrator and other persons interested," and in the power to order sale of all or part of decedent's lands, according to the exigency of the case. Whether decedent actually owned what the court orders to be sold is a question which purchasers may afterward be compelled to settle in other tribunals. Robison v. Furman, 47 N. J. Eq. 307, 20 A 898.

[a] During minority of decedent's children the homestead cannot be sold to pay debts. Kulbeth v. Drew County Timber Co., 125 Ark. 291, 188 SW 810.

[b] Abandonment of the homestead by the widow does not affect the rights of the minor children, so as to permit its sale for payment of deceased's debts during the minority of any of his children. Martin v. Conner, 115 Ark. 359, 171 SW 125.

[c] An order for a sale of the homestead is not void, although it is erroneous, and it cannot be attacked even by direct proceedings, the remedy being by appeal. Sigmond v. Bebber, 104 Iowa 431, 73 NW 1027.

[d] Effect of order of sale.—Where the head of a family dies after his property has been set apart as a homestead for the use of his family, but before termination of the homestead, the administrator on his estate, as against beneficiaries of the homestead remaining in possession, does not by virtue of an order of the court of ordinary, directing sale of the homestead property for the purpose of paying debts and for distribution, acquire a present right of entry. Craddock v. Kelly, 129 Ga. 818, 60 SE 193.

[e] Will not intending sale of homestead.—Where testator devised his homestead to his wife for life, remainder over to his grandchildren, and the rest of the property not being sufficient to pay his debts, and the homestead property being worth more than the amount allowed for an undeclared homestead, the executor petitioned for the sale of the entire homestead, to pay, out of the excess, the remaining indebtedness, upon a construction of the will, testator did not intend a sale of the homestead to preserve the remainder interests, and the remainder interest only should be sold, upon suitable bond by the wife that the proceeds thereof would satisfy the debts. Marx v. Haley, 92 Miss. 113, 45 S 612.

[f] Setting off homestead; allowance in lieu of.—On a proceeding by an administrator to sell land to pay debts, the widow, if the owner of a homestead, is entitled to have it set off by metes and bounds, but is not entitled in lieu thereof to an allowance of five hundred dollars. Bliss v. Fuhrman, 6 Oh. Cir. Ct. 203, 3 Oh. Cir. Dec. 416.

[g] After the period of exemption has expired (1) the land reverts to the estate and may then be ordered to be sold, Taylor v. Thorn, 29 Oh. St. 569. (2) And at the expiration of that period the executor or administrator is entitled to an order of sale, if there are existing debts, and the purchaser at the first sale will be subrogated to the rights of creditors whose claims were satisfied with the money paid by him. Wehrle v. Wehrle, 39 Oh. St. 365.

[h] Increase in value of homestead.—Where a homestead was worth less than one thousand dollars at the death of the owner, but increased in value so that for several years prior to the death of the widow it was worth more than one thousand dollars, creditors were not barred from enforcing their claims against such excess on the death of the widow because they failed to proceed to sell such excess prior to her death. Atherton v. Hughes, 249 Ill. 317, 94 NE 546 [rev 156 Ill. A. 215].

[i] Creditors have been held justified in delaying an attempt to sell land occupied by decedent's widow as her homestead until the termination of her homestead right, although twenty-seven years elapsed. Frier v. Lowe, 232 Ill. 622, 83 NE 1083 [rev 119 Ill. A. 246].

[j] Estoppel to object.—Where a sale of the homestead to pay debts is duly ordered and is in all respects regular and made to an innocent purchaser who makes valuable improvements with knowledge of the children and heirs, who acquiesce therein for more than five years after becoming of legal age, such knowledge and acquiescence will estop them to maintain action to establish this interest in the property. [a] The burden of proof is on one claiming under an administrator's deed of a homestead to show that the debt for payment of which it was sold was contracted before the homestead right was acquired. Kelsay v. Frazier, 78 Mo. 111.

[b] When unconditional sale proper.—Where the debts contracted by decedent before the adoption of the homestead exemption law exceed the value of the personalty an unconditional sale should be ordered, and it is error to discriminate in the order of sale between debts incurred before and after the passage of the homestead law, as such discrimination, if exercised at all, must be exercised when the proceeds of the land sold are brought into court for distribution. Gamble v. Watterson, 83 N. C. 573.

[c] It must appear from the records of the probate court that the order was to sell for a debt that accrued before the homestead was acquired in order to divest heirs of their homestead rights by an administrator's sale. Daudt v. Harmon, 16 Mo. A. 203; Howe v. McGivern, 25 Wis. 525.

[d] Jurisdiction of probate court in case of mortgage. — The probate court cannot make an order of sale of the homestead of a deceased husband to satisfy a valid mortgage executed before the declaration of homestead. His remedy is in the district court. In re Orr, 29 Cal. 101.

[e] Presumption.—Where a sale of a homestead is decreed it will be presumed that it was for an antecedent debt, such decree being entitled to the same presumptions in its favor as a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction. Phillips v. James, 115 Ga. 425, 41 SE 663; Murphy v. De France, 105 Mo. 53 [overr Daudt v. Harmon, 16 Mo. A. 203].

not exempt.[18] It has been asserted, however, that the land may be sold subject to the homestead right,[19] although this has also been denied.[20] There is also authority for the view that, where the land occupied as a homestead exceeds the value of the statutory homestead, and the situation is such that the dwelling house and the grounds on which it stands to the value of the exemption cannot be set aside, equity has jurisdiction, on application of the representative, to direct a sale of the entire tract and from the proceeds set apart the value of the exemption.[21] Where the value of the homestead exceeds the amount which is exempt and the property cannot be divided, the statutes sometimes permit a sale of the entire property, giving to the person entitled to the homestead the value thereof out of the proceeds.[22]

[§ 1480] 16. Encumbered Property. As a general rule the court has power to order a sale of property which is mortgaged or otherwise encumbered, subject to the encumbrance,[23] even though, in case of a mortgage, an action for foreclosure is pending,[24] unless the personal representative is made a party to the foreclosure proceeding.[25] In some jurisdictions a sale may be ordered free of the lien of such encumbrances, provision being made for their payment out of the proceeds.[26] The authorities differ as to whether or not the personal representative may proceed to clear the title of the property before selling. Some, construing strictly the powers given him in reference to the real estate, hold that he cannot involve the estate in litigation for the purpose of removing encumbrances, but that he must sell the property as he finds it;[27] while others hold that the order of sale divests the title of the heir and invests the personal representative with the title so far as to enable him to remove encumbrances, in order that the sale may be made for the best interests of the creditors and the estate.[28]

If, however, the mortgagee is a party to the suit the direction will not be made in the common alternative form that the property shall be sold free from his security if he concurs in the sale and subject to it if he does not concur, but the court will require him to elect at once whether he will concur or not. [§ 1481] 17. Lands Subject to Interest of Surviving Spouse. As a general rule the reversionary interest in land subject to the widow's dower may be sold for payment of decedent's debts before the dower interest has expired, although the dower itself cannot be defeated;[29] but under some statutes the rule is somewhat different as to the statutory interest which the widow takes in her deceased husband's estate.[30] The curtesy estate has been considered to be subject to be defeated by the necessity for a sale of the land to pay the debts of decedent,[31] although there is also authority for the contrary view.[32] It has been considered that the property may be sold free of the husband's curtesy,[33] provided, but not unless, he consents thereto,[34] and if he does not consent, the property may be sold subject to his curtesy.[35]

[§ 1482] 18. Marshaling. In determining what land shall be sold, where a sale of all is not necessary, or in fixing the order in which the various parcels shall be sold, where it is doubtful whether or not a sale of all is necessary, the doctrine of marshaling assets, with certain modifications and extensions rendered necessary by the circumstances of the case, is usually held applicable.[36]

[a] Assignment of dower before sale.—When the widow is a defendant in a suit brought to subject the realty of a decedent to the payment of his debts, and she has not elected to take the value of her dower in money, her dower should be assigned before an out-and-out sale of the realty is decreed. McKittrick v. McKittrick, 43 W. Va. 117, 27 SE 303. See also Gooch v. Gooch, 70 W. Va. 38, 73 SE 56, 37 LRANS 930 (error to decree the sale of land subject to dower, instead of assigning dower therefrom).

[b] Payment to widow to release dower.—An administrator cannot, as a matter of law, recover from an estate the sum he has paid the widow to release her right of dower in lands sold by him under a probate license; the statute does not empower him to make any such arrangement, and under the license the purchaser can buy only the interest of the estate. Needham v. Belote, 39 Mich. 487.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) Where a testator directed his debts to be paid, made a specific devise of certain lands, and gave over the residuum, and died seized of real estate acquired after making the will and which did not pass thereby, upon the application of executors for license to sell real estate for the payment of debts the lands not included in the specific devise and which would otherwise fall into the residuum should be sold first and the after-acquired lands next. Hays v. Jackson, 6 Mass. 149. (2) Where lands are sold to satisfy the debts of the devisee, such lands being subject to the charge of certain legacies not yet due, the purchasers thereof are substituted to the right of the lien creditors making the sale and entitled to demand that such charge is made upon those parcels upon which the liens of the selling creditors attached last and so on in inverse order of their creation. In re Cowden, 1 Pa. 267. (3) Under a statute requiring the property of testator to be resorted to for the payment of debts "in the following order: 1. The property which is expressly appropriated by the will for the payment of the debts. 2. Property not disposed of by will. 3. Property which is devised or bequeathed to a residuary legatee. 4. Property which is not specifically devised or bequeathed. 5. All other property ratably," and a statute requiring the other real estate belonging to testator to be sold before resorting to real estate which has been devised and not charged with the payment of debts, property belonging to the first four enumerated classes must be sold before resorting to property specifically devised; but, if it is insufficient, property specifically devised must then be resorted to ratably to pay testator's debts, regardless of the nature of the devise, whether made for a valuable consideration or for charitable purposes, and notwithstanding equities existing in favor of certain devisees which might entitle them to a conveyance of the land devised to them. In re Tuohy, 33 Mont. 230, 83 P 486. (4) The court will reserve, to be sold the last, the mansion house in which the widow lives, especially where she has taken it in lieu of dower. Taylor's Est., 4 Pa. Dist. 477, 16 Pa. Co. 529.

[b] Conveyance by heir.—(1) The purchaser of land from the heir is entitled, on a petition by the administrator to sell lands to pay debts, to have the unsold land first applied thereto. Howell v. Duke, 40 Ark. 102. (2) Where an heir has conveyed a part of the real estate which descended to him, before the debts of the decedent are paid, the surrogate may direct the land still belonging to the heir to be sold first for the payment of such debts so as to protect the equitable rights of the purchaser. Eddy v. Traver, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 521, 31 AmD 261.

[c] Application by creditor claiming purchase money.—Where land is decreed to be sold for the payment of decedent's debts upon the application of a creditor whose claim is for the purchase money of certain land bought by such debtor, the land so purchased should be first sold. Spencer v. Pearce, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 294.

[d] Devised and undevised lands.—(1) Undevised lands should be ordered sold for the payment of debts before those specifically devised; but the surrogate has no power to order the money to be raised out of an undevised remainder, although the clear intent of the statute is that the devised life estate shall be exonerated. Pelletreau v. Smith, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 494. (2) Where a testator devised only a part of his estate, and as to this gave a life estate to his wife with remainder over, in selling property to pay debts the undevised property should be sold first, then, in case more was needed, the devised property subject to the life estate, and last the life estate. Camp Mfg. Co. v. Liverman, 123 N. C. 7, 31 SE 346. (3) Where a will gave a devisee an interest in a lot, and it became necessary to make a sale of real estate to pay debts of decedent, a decree ordering a sale of real eseral. Where a decedent's lands are in separate lots or parcels, or are otherwise easily capable of separation, a probate decree for a sale to pay debts should as a general rule be limited to so much as will satisfy the valid debts,[37] but a sale cannot be held erroneous because of the absence of proof as to the indivisibility of the land sold, where the entire proceeds of the sale were insufficient to discharge the debt.[38] The court is usually allowed an ample discretion as to decreeing the sale of the whole or any part of a decedent's realty as may be deemed suitable or as the best interest of the estate may require, the scope and expression of its license to sell, determining the rights of all concerned in the premises,[39] and a sale of more land than is necessary to pay debts may be ordered if the court deems that a sale of a smaller quantity will be prejudicial to the heirs or devisees,[40] or a sale of all the real estate may be ordered in a proper case,[41] as where the estate is indivisible without impairing its value,[42] or for any other reason a sale of the whole tate, but providing that the lot in question should not be sold until the balance of the estate had become exhausted, was in conformity with the code. In re Bryant, 38 Wash. 337, 80 P 555. (4) Where devisees were parties to a suit in which the lands specifically devised to them were sold to pay debts of testator, and they made no objection, and did not ask to have the lands not devised sold first, but stood by, and saw the court, which had complete jurisdiction, dispose of the entire matter and enter a final decree, they had no equities. Gwinner v. Michael, 103 Va. 268, 48 SE 895.

[e] Interest of estate.—Where in a proceeding to sell land, consisting of vacant lots and an undivided interest in a storehouse to pay debts, it appeared that the vacant lots were insufficient to pay the debts and that it was to the interest of the estate to sell the undivided interest instead of the vacant lots, it was not error so to order. Erck v. Erck, 107 Tenn. 77, 63 SW 1122.

[f] Unsalability as "exhaustion" of property.—Where an order for the sale of real estate to pay debts ordered that the administrator should not sell certain lots until the balance of the estate "has been exhausted, and unless it shall become necessary to sell the same to raise the said sum," and the administrator for more than six months offered property other than the lots for sale, but was not able to sell sufficient thereof to raise the sum required, and the statute required that any sale by the administrator must be made within six months from the date fixed by him when he will commence receiving bids, it was proper to sell the lots in question, the other property having been "exhausted" within the meaning of the order. [a] Illustration.—On a proceeding to sell land to pay debts, it appeared that testatrix died seized of real estate to the value of five thousand six hundred dollars; that the debts unpaid amounted to one thousand two hundred and eighty-seven dollars and thirty-seven cents; that, if a specified legacy could be applied, they would be reduced to two hundred and eighty-seven dollars and thirty-seven cents; and that the sale of any two houses would raise the whole of the unpaid debts, and of any one house would raise the debts after application of the legacy. It was held that the court should have directed the sale of such houses as would have been sufficient, and no more, and an order to sell all the houses belonging to testatrix was erroneous, there being no evidence that the sale of any one or two of them would diminish the value of the others. In re Whitaker, 72 N. J. Eq. 362, 65 A 124.

Pranger, 68 SW 632, 24 KyL 408 (a judicial sale of lands to pay debts is void, as to infant heirs, where more land is sold than is necessary to pay the debts of the ancestor, unless the property is indivisible).

[d] Misapplication of proceeds.—If enough land has been sold to pay all the debts, but some of the creditors who were parties to the proceeding were not paid, in consequence of the misappropriation of the proceeds of the sale, they cannot have other portions of the estate sold, because they should have seen to it that the proceeds were properly applied. Minn.—Kelly v. Slack, 93 Minn. 489, 101 NW 797.

[a] How indivisibility to be established.—It is not necessary that the indivisibility of real property be established in a suit to settle a decedent's estate wherein the sale of real property is sought to pay debts, by proof other than such as may be is for the best interests of the estate.[43] But it has been held error to license an executor to sell so much real estate as he may deem for the best interests of the estate.[44] If the representative sells more than he was authorized to sell by the order or license of the court the sale is void.[45]

[§ 1484] 2. Entire Interest of Decedent. Upon a sale of land by an executor or administrator for the payment of the debts, all decedent's interest therein should be sold, subject only to encumbrances existing at the time of his death,[46] and where decedent owned the entire estate, an undivided or partial interest therein cannot be sold.[47]

[§ 1485] F. Payment or Security to Prevent Sale. The heirs or legatees, or those interested in the estate, have ordinarily a right to furnish the necessary money for the payment of decedent's debts and thus remove the cloud upon their title to the land arising out of its liability to be sold for the debts;[48] and in some states it is considered that no decree of sale for the payment of debts should be made without giving them a reasonable opportunity to pay the debts and thus avoid a sale.[49] The heirs or devisees may also, under some statutes, prevent a sale of the realty by giving a bond for the payment of debts,[50] and it is held that the giving of furnished by the pleadings and exhibits, as a prerequisite to a sale of the real property as a whole, nor must it be established as a prerequisite that the sale of the real property as a whole would be to the interest of the infant heir. Foley v. Graham, 110 SW 828, 33 KyL 627.

[b] Evidence establishing indivisibility.—A finding by the probate court that the estate in question could not be equitably divided among the heirs and distributees, and it was not for the advantage of all parties concerned to sell an undivided two-thirds interest to pay the legacies, was justified by evidence that an undivided interest in real estate in Minneapolis, in which the property was situated, would not command a ready market, and would result in a sacrifice of the property; that it would not not sell for as much in undivided lots as if sold as a whole. Kelly v. Slack, 93 Minn. 489, 101 NW 797.

[c] Findings showing indivisibility.—(1) Where the court, in determining whether all of a decedent's land should be sold, found that, "owing to the uncertainty of the distribution of the oil, and as to its location, quantity, and quality in said real estate, it is impossible to make a fair and equitable partition of the entire tract," and that "the water on said parcel of land is limited to two places, which renders it impracticable to make an equitable partition of said tract," it was a necessary implication from such findings that a remainder after the sale of any part would be impossible of partition. In re Newlove, 142 Cal. 377, 75 P 1083. (2) A finding and evidence that the residue of a decedent's real estate could not be partitioned after a sale of a part is sufficient to sustain an order to sell the whole, without aid from a finding that a sale of a part would injure the residue. In re Newlove, 142 Cal. 377, 75 P 1083.

[d] The rights of infants should be protected where a sale of more land than is necessary to pay debts is ordered, because of the land being indivisible. Carter v. Crowe, 130 Ky. 41, 112 SW 1098.

[a] Question of fact for court.—Whether it would be for the advantage, benefit, and best interests of the estate, or of those interested therein, to order a sale of all the real estate or of only a part is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court upon the evidence before it in reference thereto. [a] Payment by heir or devisee of his share of debts.—(1) Where a testator devised all his real estate to his two sons in severalty, and upon the executor's obtaining leave to sell real estate to pay debts, one of the sons paid his half of the debts, the executor's action in selling only such real estate as had been devised to the other son was proper. Prescott v. Walker, 16 N. H. 340. (2) Where partition had been made of land between the heirs, and a part of the heirs had sold their shares, and the creditors of the ancestor instituted proceedings to subject the land to the payment of debts, the heirs who had not sold their land were not entitled to pay their ratable portions of the debt and retain the land discharged therefrom, nor was an heir who had sold his land for more than his ratable share of the debt entitled to be discharged from liability on payment of such ratable share. Hinton v. Whitehurst, 73 N. C. 157.

[b] Conditional tender.—A tender of the debt by the heirs, coupled with a condition that the creditors assign the debt to them, will not prevent an order of sale. Weill v. Clark, 9 Or. 387.

[c] The mere payment to an executor by a devisee of the amount of decedent's debts will not discharge the land from the lien of creditors' claims. Hunt v. Moore, 2 Pa. 105.

[d] A mere license to enter land and cut and remove the trees as purchaser thereof gives no such interest in the land as entitles one to pay the deceased seller's debts, so as to prevent the sale of the land for paying debts of the estate. Fletcher v. Livingston, 153 Mass. 388, 26 NE 1001.

[a] All need not give bond.—It is not essential that all the heirs or devisees should give such bond. Jenness v. Robinson, 10 N. H. 215.

[b] A widow, having a dower interest in the real estate of her deceased husband, is sufficiently interested in the estate to entitle her, such a bond is the only method by which the heirs can prevent a sale of the land when the personalty is insufficient to pay debts.[51]

An offer in a pleading to pay the debts, or of judgment that the pleader give bond for their payment, is not equivalent to actual payment of the debts or giving bond, and is insufficient to prevent a sale.[52]

Only sales for the payment of debts can be prevented by giving bond,[53] and such bond cannot defeat a sale to carry out the will of the testator or to make partition.[54]

[§ 1486] G. Proceedings for Sale—1. In General. A sale can ordinarily be ordered only in an appropriate proceeding for that purpose in which the statutory requirements are complied with and such an order is asked;[55] and an instrument executed by an heir, authorizing the executor or administrator to sell the land of the heirs in connection with one or more of the heirs of such estate, to give the bond provided for by statute to obviate a sale of such real estate to pay debts, etc., by the administrator, and, having in good faith given such bond, and, as required by the conditions thereof, paid to the administrator the aggregate amount of the valid debts of decedent and the charges of administration, is not to be regarded as a mere volunteer, but is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the administrator and fully reimbursed from a fund arising from the sale of such real estate in a proceeding in partition by the heirs. Corey v. Hayes, 13 Oh. Cir. Ct. 185, 7 Oh. Cir. Dec. 272.

[c] Where an executor who is also residuary legatee gives bond for the payment of debts and legacies, a sale of realty for payment of debts cannot properly be ordered. Thayer v. Winchester, 133 Mass. 447. Contra Lefferty v. People's Sav. Bank, 76 Mich. 35, 43 NW 34.

[d] A bond given after an order of sale has been made is valid and enforceable, although the statute provides only for a bond before such an order, the effect of which is to prevent the making of the order. Davisson v. Burgess, 31 Oh. St. 78.

[e] Rescinding order of sale.—Where the heirs give security to pay the debts, it is a proper exercise of the discretion of the court to rescind an order of sale of the real estate for the payment of such debts. Single's App., 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 160.

[f] The bond need not strictly conform to the statute, provided it supplies in good season the needful security for dispensing with the sale. Davisson v. Burgess, 31 Oh. St. 78.

[g] When condition broken.—The condition of such a bond is broken when it is ascertained by an account settled in the probate court that debts have been found due from the estate, and that the goods, chattels, and personal assets of the deceased are insufficient for their payment, but not earlier. Studley v. Josselyn, 5 Allen (Mass.) 118.

[h] Offer not in conformity to statute.—Where the personal estate amounted to two hundred and sixty dollars and the claims filed were about one hundred and twenty-seven dollars and over eleven hundred dollars in notes made by decedent directly to his widow who was the administratrix, and on application by the administratrix for leave to sell land the heirs offered to give bond to pay all the debts except the notes, an order for sale was proper since the orphans' court could not determine the validity of the claims on an application for leave to sell the land, and the offer of the heirs was not in conformity with the statute. In re Pitcher, 61 N. J. Eq. 614, 47 A 277.

[i] When statute not applicable.—The statute providing that any person interested in a decedent's estate may prevent a sale of it by giving a bond to pay all demands against the estate to the extent of the value of the property does not apply to an action by an administrator with the will annexed to recover assets alleged to have been unlawfully seized by a devisee. Dexter v. Gordon, 136 Mich. 235, 98 NW 1016.

[b] Where the will directs a sale.—A will having directed the sale of real property for division among the heirs, they cannot deprive the court of jurisdiction to order a sale by offering to furnish a bond to pay debts. McLeod v. Butts, 89 Kan. 785, 132 P 1174.

When resort to the real property of a decedent for the payment of his debts is sought by his creditors it can only be had by virtue of the statute and the prescribed statutory proceedings must be strictly pursued." Personeni v. Goodale, 199 N. Y. 323, 332, 92 NE 754.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) A bill by an administrator, in the interest of two of the creditors, which did not make the widow and heirs parties, and which was not signed by the administrator, nor verified by him, and did not show the condition of the estate or amount of claims, but sought to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance made by his intestate, could not be treated as a petition for the sale of the intestate's land, but was merely a possessory action, and therefore could not be maintained by the administrator. Majorowicz v. Payson, 153 Ill. 484, 39 NE 127. (2) Under Civ. Code Pract. §§ 428–430, authorizing the bringing of an action for the settlement of a decedent's estate, requiring the petition in such an action to state the amount of decedent's debts and the nature and value of his property, empowering the court to order a sale of so much of the real property as may be necessary for the payment of the debts in case the personal estate is insufficient, and providing that the court shall make an order for the creditors of decedent to appear before a commissioner and prove their claims, it was error for the court to direct a sale of a decedent's lands to pay debts, where the petition, while alleging that the personal estate was insufficient to pay the indebtedness and that decedent owed at the time of her death several thousand dollars, did not state the amount of the personal estate and did not make any of the creditors parties to the action, and the court made no order of reference to a commissioner before whom the creditors might prove their claims, and no claims, purged of usury, set-off, and discount as required by the statute, were filed by the creditors. Tabb v. Wortham, 89 SW 191, 28 Ky. 260. (3) The power of the court on the hearing of a petition by executors for an order authorizing them to apply a dividend on stock belonging to the estate for the payment of debts is limited to the granting or denying of the prayer of the petition, and a reiteration of a prior order to sell real estate to pay debts when personal property not specially bequeathed was available is ineffectual. In re Noon, 49 Or. 286, 88 P 673, 90 P 673.

[b] It is essential to the validity of the sale that the court should so far conform to the statute regulating the proceedings as to acquire jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties. Price v. Winter, 15 Fla. 66.

[c] Strict compliance with the statutory requirements is necessary so far as such requirements relate to the absolute prerequisites of the sale, although errors or defects that go to the form and not to the substance may be disregarded. In re Mahoney, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 501.

[d] On accounting (1) by an executor or administrator the probate court has no incidental power of ordering a sale of realty for the payment of debts and will not consider the alleged invalidity of a conveyance by the residuary legatee. O'Connor v. Gifford, 3 NYS 207, 6 Dem. Surr. 71. See also Picard v. Montross, (Miss.) 17 S 375 (final report in accounting not such a bill or petition as to justify a decree for sale of land). (2) But statutes sometimes confer authority upon the court to make an order of sale in connection with the representative's accounts, making it appear that the personal estate is insufficient to pay the debts.

ministrator to sell certain land "under the direction of the court," does not dispense with the necessity of observing all the statutory requirements.[56] But it has been held that irregularities in probate proceedings for an administrator's sale, not going to the jurisdiction of the court, cannot be reviewed where not inquired into within the time limited by law, or within such time as the rights of those who complain should be asserted under equitable principles.[57] Where the administrator commenced proceedings for the sale of real estate, all of the orders made are in the proceeding, as such proceeding consists of all orders and things done by the court, from the filing of the petition to the confirmation of the sale and delivery of the deed.[58]

Transfer of administration to chancery court. A statute providing for sales of personal property by the personal representatives, under orders of the probate court, does not govern in such proceedings in the chancery court in cases where the administration of an estate has been transferred, but such proceedings are controlled by a chancery rule authorizing the chancellor to order the sale of any personal property in the hands of a receiver, executor, or administrator within its jurisdiction.[59]

[§ 1487] 2. Nature and Form of Proceedings. While an application to the probate court by the executor or administrator for leave to sell the lands of the estate is very generally regarded as a proceeding in rem,[60] there is also authority for the view that the proceeding is not in rem but in its nature adversary.[61] It has been held that a proceeding by an executor or administrator to sell land for the payment of debts is not a chancery proceeding,[62] although it must be in all respects according to the practice of a court of chancery.[63] There is also, however, authority for the view that the proceeding is equitable in its nature.[64]

[§ 1488] 3. Joinder of Proceedings. A proceeding to sell real estate for the payment of debts may be joined with a statutory proceeding to sell so that the widow's interest can be set apart, but before making such sale the interest of the widow should be ascertained so that her rights at the sale can be protected without putting her under the burden of protecting incidentally the rights of the creditors.[65]

[f] Filing of title papers.—Ky. Civ. Code § 492, requiring title papers to be filed in certain actions, is not applicable to an action to procure a sale of an intestate's interest in lands, to pay his debts and for distribution to the heirs. Rodgers v. Rodgers, 31 SW 139, 17 KyL 358.

[g] Renewal of order of sale.—Where an order for the administrator's sale of real property had been duly published and once renewed, the entry of an order of sale at a subsequent term which recited that the previous order of publication had been duly published amounted to a second renewal of the order of sale, and no application or order of publication was necessary. Code Pract. § 692, requiring plaintiff in an action to enforce a lien to make other lienholders defendants, and permitting a judgment of sale to satisfy all the liens, although such defendants failed to assert their claims, but providing that they shall not be allowed to withdraw or receive any of the proceeds until they have shown their right thereto by answering and cross petition. [a] In North Carolina, where a petition for the sale of real estate alleges that the purpose of the sale is to provide a fund to pay debts and preserve the personalty, the clerk has no power to order the sale of the land under the proceeding provided by Revisal (1905) § 68, but relief must be had in a court having general equity jurisdiction. Settle v. Settle, 141 N. C. 553, 54 SE 445.

65. Albuquerque First Nat. Bank v. Lee, 8 N. M. 589, 45 P 1114.

66. Necessity for actual application of personalty see supra § 1452.

General. It has been held premature to decree a sale of the realty before adjudicating the claims of creditors and their respective priorities in order to ascertain the precise amount chargeable upon such realty,[67] or to decree a sale of the whole of the land in satisfaction of claims of creditors before dower has been assigned to the widow in kind, or it is ascertained that it cannot be so assigned and a money compensation to the widow in lieu of dower has been ascertained.[68] But where it is clear that the personalty is insufficient to pay the debts, the representative is not obliged to wait until all claims have been filed before instituting proceedings to sell realty;[69] and where the question whether an administrator has committed a devastavit can be determined only by suit, a creditor of the estate is not required to postpone making an application for a sale of realty to satisfy the debt, until litigation over the question of devastavit is determined by the court of last resort.[70] As the law favors the speedy and orderly settlement of estates, an heir will not be suffered to interfere with such speedy and orderly settlement by a hasty suit in partition;[71] but the partition suit, if commenced, will be superseded by, and subject to, the proceedings of the administrator on his cross petition praying for the sale of lands to pay debts.[72] A probate court does not lose jurisdiction to order the sale of land for the payment of debts, if the order is made within the period to which the time for the payment of claims may properly be extended, although the extension may not have been actually made;[73] and it has also been held that the orphans' court has jurisdiction to decree the sale of the real estate to pay the expenses of the administration of the estate after the expiration of the lien of decedent's debts.[74] The court cannot, as a rule, order or license a sale after the succession has been actually closed and the executor or administrator has been discharged;[75] but a probate license to sell or mortgage real estate is not necessarily void because granted after the expiration of the statutory time allowed for closing up the estate, if it has not been closed up in fact and if the will contemplates that it shall remain in the hands of the executor for a longer period.[76]

[§ 1490] b. Statutes of Limitation.[77] The general statutes of limitation do not as a rule apply to an application for the sale of a decedent's real estate,[78] although a contrary view has been asserted;[79] and it has also been held that the court should not license a sale of land to pay debts against an estate after the legal remedy for their recovery has been barred by lapse of time.[80] In some jurisdictions,—An action by an executor or administrator to sell lands fraudulently conveyed by his testator or intestate in his lifetime must be commenced within five years after the death of decedent. Wash.—Scammon v. Ward, 1 Wash. 179, 23 P 439.

[a] When debts have been proved within the time limited, a sale for their payment may be ordered after the expiration of such time. Edmunds v. Rockwell, 125 Mass. 363.

[b] Where an administrator neglected to give notice of his appointment, a license to him to sell real estate for the payment of debts was valid, although granted more than four years after his appointment, that being the time limited for the bringing of actions against him. Hudson v. Hulbert, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 423.

[c] Effect of statute limiting suits against heirs.—A petitioner to the surrogate's court for the sale of a decedent's land to satisfy a judgment is not, upon the objection of the statute of limitations against his claims, entitled to the benefit of 2 N. Y. Rev. St. p 109 § 53, prohibiting the bringing of suits against heirs or devisees to charge them with a decedent's debts within the three years from the grant of letters, as this section of the statute applies to actions in the supreme court only. Mead v. Jenkins, 4 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 369.

[a] Where the heirs have been put in possession after partition among themselves, an order to sell succession property cannot be granted. Servier v. Gordon, 25 La. Ann. 231.

[b] Expiration of time before sale can be made.—Where a license to sell was granted within four years and six months from the appointment of the original administrator, the fact that more than that period would elapse before the sale could be made thereunder did not deprive the court of jurisdiction. In re Beniteau, 88 Mich. 152, 50 NW 110 (where the court said that Hoffman v. Beard, 32 Mich. 218, has been substantially overruled and is not good law).

[b] Purpose of sale as governing consideration.—(1) The right of an executor or administrator to obtain an order of sale for the payment of debts as against the heirs is wholly unaffected by the statute of limitations. Lafferty v. Shinn, 38 Oh. St. 46 [foll Taylor v. Thorn, 29 Oh. St. 569]. (2) The lapse of six years from the time the right to payment of a legacy accrues and the deficiency of personal assets is ascertained constitutes a bar to an action by an administrator de bonis non with the will annexed to sell the real estate for the payment of the legacy. Longley v. Stump, 9 Oh. Dec. (Reprint) 234, 11 CincLBul 247.

[c] Continuation of original proceedings.—Where an administrator obtained leave to sell land to pay debts, but for good reasons no sale was made for four years, and the administrator then again petitioned for leave to sell, the second petition could be considered a continuation of the proceedings had under the first petition, and statutes of limitation were in no way applicable. In re Montgomery, 60 Cal. 645 (where the court refused to decide whether the statute would have been applicable in any event).

[b] Fraudulent conveyance by decedent.—

dictions there have, however, been enacted particular statutes of limitation with reference to the time within which application must be made for an order or license to sell,[81] which statutes as a rule begin to run from the time of the appointment or qualification of the executor or administrator.[82] statute, which provides that a creditor may institute a proceeding to sell realty within three years after the issue of letters of administration, does not extend the statute of limitations indefinitely, so that such proceedings may be instituted within that time, regardless of the period that has elapsed before admiinistration was granted. Church v. Olendorf, 49 Hun 439, 3 NYS 557.

[e] A statute limiting the lien of unsecured debts of a decedent is not like a statute of limitation which may or may not be pleaded, but it raises an absolute bar to any right to collect out of the real estate unless action was brought or the claim filed, except by the consent of the heirs. Hoover's Est., 9 Kulp (Pa.) 126.

[f] Where the lien of debts upon real estate has expired (1) by reason of the five-year limitation prescribed by the act of Febr. 24, 1834, the orphans' court has no jurisdiction to direct the executor or administrator to sell the real estate for the payment of such debts. Smith v. Wildman, 178 Pa. 245, 35 A 1047, 56 AmSR 760, 36 LRA 834. (2) An adjudication confirming the account of an executor does not create a lien on the real estate if the lien of the debt was lost by lapse of time before the account was filed. Battersby v. Castor, 181 Pa. 555, 37 A 572. (3) The limitation under the statute referred to does not, however, apply to the sale of real estate where any one of the debts for which it is ordered as a payment is "secured by mortgage or judgment"; but in such case the orphans' court has jurisdiction to order a sale more than five years after the decease, and the purchaser thereat takes a valid title. Bindley's App., 69 Pa. 295.

[g] Expiration of judgment lien.—The power to sell the real estate to pay debts, reduced to judgments, may not be exercised after the expiration of twenty years from the time the judgments became due and payable. Tuff v. Cohen, 26 Del. 404, 84 A 946.

[h] Application within time limited for presentation of claims.—Where the owner of a mortgage on lands of a decedent applies to the probate court to have the mortgage redeemed out of the personal assets of the estate, or, in the alternative, to have the land sold and the proceeds applied on the debt, and any deficiency remaining, after exhausting the land, satisfied out of decedent's other estate, he must apply within the year allowed for presentation of claims against the estate. Scammon v. Ward, 1 Wash. 179, 23 P 439.

[i] The time within which action cannot be brought against the heirs is not to be included in computing the elapsed period. Mead v. Jenkins, 95 N. Y. 31 [aff 27 Hun 570, 29 Hun 253].

[a] Effect of order in another state enjoining proceedings against estate.—An order by a court in one state enjoining creditors of a decedent from proceeding against the estate otherwise than by proving their demands before certain commissioners did not restrain a creditor from legally enforcing his claim against the estate out of real property belonging to it and situated in another state so as to prevent the running of limitations against a proceeding for that purpose during the period in which the order was in force. Mowry v. McQueen, 80 Minn. 385, 83 NW 348.

[b] Revesting of title in heir.—A statute requiring an application for sale to be made within three years after the grant of letters if the heir or devisee has aliened the land applies even though the title has meanwhile revested in the heir. Dodge v. Stevens, 105 N. Y. 585, 12 NE 759 [rev 40 Hun 443].

[c] Limitation applicable only in favor of bona fide purchasers for value.—Mead v. Jenkins, 95 N. Y. 31 [aff 27 Hun 570, 29 Hun 253]; Mead v. Jenkins, 4 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 369.

[d] A debt in judgment at the time of decedent's death is not within the statute requiring action within two years after death to sell realty, but realty may be ordered sold for the payment of such a debt, even though a number of years (in the case at bar nineteen) have elapsed since the death of decedent. Hoover's Est., 9 Kulp (Pa.) 126.

[e] Limitation applicable only to creditors.—Reinhardt v. Reinhardt, 21 W. Va. 76.

[f] Limitation not applicable to sale for payment of legacies or distribution.—Brennan v. Adler, 180 NYS 359.

[g] Repealed statute.—L. (1879) c 18 (St. [1894] § 4598), authorizing a sale to be made within one year after the making of the order or within such further time, not exceeding two years, as might be allowed by the judge of probate, operated to repeal L. (1876) c 37 § 3, so far as the latter limited the time within which the real estate of a deceased person might be sold for payment of debts to three years from the date of death. Culver v. Hardenbergh, 37 Minn. 225, 33 NW 792.

[h] The time that an action was pending against the executor for the debt for which a sale is asked is not included in the three years within which the statute requires the application for an order of sale to be made. In re Bingham, 127 N. Y. 296, 27 NE 1055.

[i] The fact that property may increase in value does not excuse an administrator postponing long beyond statutory time application for an order to sell to pay claims. In re Brigham, 144 Iowa 71, 120 NW 1054.

[j] Statute directory only.—Kirby Dig. § 224, requiring executors and administrators to make final settlement of their administration within three years from the date of letters, is directory only, and does not divest the probate court of jurisdiction to complete administration after that time, and under the statute providing generally that if the personal estate will be insufficient to pay the debts the executor or administrator may apply to the court for a sale of real estate, the court may order a sale of land for the payment of debts after the expiration of three years, seven years being the shortest period of delay which will bar the right to such a sale, in the absence of circumstances excusing the delay. Brown v. Nelms, 86 Ark. 368, 112 SW 373.

[k] Statute not retrospective.—In the absence of administration on the estate of an owner of land, who died in 1863, his debts would not be barred by L. (1909) p 102 § 1, prescribing a limitation of ten years for enforcing debts by sale of the lands of a debtor who "shall" die, where there is no administration, the section being wholly prospective; nor, under § 2 providing that, as to such persons who "have died" more than ten years before the act took effect, the limitation against enforcing his debts by sale of his lands should be two years from the taking effect of the act, would the defense of limitations be available in a suit begun in June, 1910. Austin v. Shipman, 160 Mo. A. 206, 141 SW 425.

[l] A decree denying an executor's application to sell realty because it was not instituted within the time limited after the grant of letters is a bar to a subsequent application, on the ground that an amendment of the law extended the time indefinitely. In re Engel, 179 NYS 556.

[a] Statute runs from original grant.—The statute begins to run from the time of the original granting of letters of administration, and not, in case of a change of administrators, from the time of granting letters to the one who made the sale. Slocum v. English, 62 N. Y. 494 [aff 4 Thomps. & C. 266].

[b] Lapse of time before the granting of letters of administration (1) does not impair the right of the administrator to sell the property to pay the funeral expenses under Code Civ. Proc. § 2750, authorizing such a proceeding at any time within three years after letters were issued, where the application is brought within such time. Matter of Eychner, 65 Misc. 86, 120 NYS 1110, 7 Mills Surr. 300. (2) Until letters are granted or a will is admitted to probate, the court has no authority to order a sale of land to pay debts. Whitesides v. Barber, 24 S. C. 373.

[c] Limitation of time within which administration can be granted.—Where the time within which the original administration can be granted is limited by statute, the realty cannot be subjected to the payment

The filing of a petition within the time limited gives the court jurisdiction, although the citation is not returnable until after the expiration of that period,[83] or even though the citation is not issued until after the expiration of such time.[84] A fortiori, where the sale has been ordered, made, and confirmed within the time allowed by statute, it cannot be avoided because the statutory period expired before full consummation of the sale by payment of the purchase money and delivery of the deed.[85]

[§ 1491] c. Reasonable Time and Laches. Apart from statute an application for an order or license to sell must be made within a reasonable time,[86] and the right to obtain an order or license to sell may be lost by laches or delaying without excuse for an unreasonable time to make the proper application to the court.[87] But even a delay for a considerable length of time will not result in a loss of the right where such delay is excused or a good reason therefor is shown.[88] What is a reasonable time must be determined by the court, in its sound of debts by administration granted after the expiration of the statutory period. Cummings v. Lynn, 121 Iowa 344, 96 NW 857.

[a] Character of rule.—The rule is not an application, strictly, of the equitable doctrine of laches, for it lacks some of the elements of that doctrine; nor of the statute of limitation, although it is applied in cases at law as well as in equity; but it is sui generis. rather an application of the statutory period of limitation to the equitable doctrine of laches in part, so as to prevent the abuse by creditors of the right to enforce demands against the lands of a decedent after unreasonable delay. discretion, under the circumstances of each case,[89] but according to a number of cases the statute of limitations furnishes a proper analogy.[90] It has also been held that in the absence of peculiar circumstances excusing delay, the application should be made within the time allowed for the filing and allowance of claims.[91] Where the land is subject to dower and homestead interests, which substantially represent its entire value, a delay until the termination of such interests is not regarded as laches.[92] Where claims were presented to an executor soon after letters were issued to him, and, most of them being rejected, litigation arose, in which the principal ones were declared groundless, and the executor, about a year after the termination of the litigation, applied for an order authorizing the sale of lands to pay the debts which were declared valid, devisees who, desiring that the property of the estate should not be sold, encouraged the executor to lease the land, in order to raise money to pay the debts and avoid a sale of such land, and took part in proceedings instituted to enable such leases to be made, were estopped to assert that the debts found to be due from the estate should not be paid, because of laches of the executor in making his application for the sale of land to pay such debts.[93]

Where the representative is also an heir, a delay which will bar the right to sell land as against another heir may not result in the loss of the right to sell as to his own interest.[94]

Delay in prosecuting proceedings which have been commenced may warrant a dismissal of the proceedings,[95] although it has been held otherwise where no injury resulted to the heirs.[96]

[§ 1492] 5. Jurisdiction. The probate court has no inherent authority to order a sale of decedent's real estate, but such authority is a special and limited one derived from statutes which designate the special cases for its exercise and the provisions of which must be strictly complied with throughout the entire proceeding.[97] As a general rule the statutes confer jurisdiction with regard to ordering a sale of realty upon the probate court or the court vested with jurisdiction of the administration of estates,[98] and this jurisdiction is ordinarily ex-

[b] As a general rule.—(1) An application of an executor to sell real estate for the payment of debts will not be sustained unless made within eighteen months from the time he gives notice of his appointment, unless the peculiar circumstances of the case are such as to make the duty of a court of equity to depart from this general rule, and under such circumstances the application must be made within a reasonable time. McCrary v. Tasker, 41 Iowa 255 [foll Waters v. Tasker, 41 Iowa 263; Waters v. Crossen, 41 Iowa 261]. (2) Ordinarily one year is a reasonable time. Mooers v. White, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 360. (3) After the expiration of one year from the final settlement of the accounts of an intestate in the court of probate by the administrator, no application on the part of such administrator to sell the real estate to satisfy debts still due will be sustained, except the circumstances of the particular case are of such a peculiar character as to make it the duty of a court of equity to depart from this general rule. Dorman v. Lane, 6 Ill. 143.

[c] Delay not barring right.—The lapse of seven months between the death of a widow occupying a homestead and the filing of a petition by the administrator de bonis non of her husband, for an order of sale, during which time nothing was done to mislead purchasers or lead them into the belief that the creditors did not intend to enforce their claims against the premises, did not bar their right. [a] Constitutionality of statutes.—A constitutional provision conferring on the probate court jurisdiction in all matters testamentary and of administration is not contravened by a statute: (1) Authorizing that court to order a sale of decedent's land where the sale will benefit the heirs and creditors. Tucker v. Harris, 13 Ga. 1, 58 AmD 488. (2) Authorizing the sale of lands belonging to heirs, some of whom are minors, and a division of the proceeds among those entitled. Harrington v. Wofford, 46 Miss. 31.

[b] The power of the probate court cannot be directed or controlled in a proceeding in the supreme court to construe the will. Robinson v. Cogswell, 192 Mass. 79, 78 NE 389.

[c] The jurisdiction of the court of a particular county as to a particular estate is a question of fact to be determined by that court, and its determination is conclusive and cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding. Bostwick v. Skinner, 80 Ill. 147.

[d] Jurisdiction of clerk.—(1) Under Acts (1882) No. 43, the absence of the judge from the parish vested jurisdiction in the clerk to grant orders for the sale of succession property to pay debts. Hibernia Bank, etc., Co. v. Whitney, 130 La. 817, 58 S 583. (2) Whether the clerk of the superior court, in the exercise of his probate jurisdiction, has jurisdiction to entertain an action by administrators to sell lands of their intestate is immaterial after the action is removed into the superior court before the judge; for, the parties all being represented, and as the superior court would have had jurisdiction of such an action originally brought before it, the proceedings become coram judice, and a sale thereunder is valid. McMillan v. Reeves, 102 N. C. 550, 9 SE 449.

[e] A jurisdictional limit as to amount involved with respect to the court exercising probate jurisdiction does not apply to proceedings to sell property of a decedent, and hence jurisdiction exists, although the value of the property exceeds the jurisdictional amount. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 32 Colo. 365, 76 P 799; Chambers v. Watson, 17 S. C. L. 511.

[f] What statute applicable.—Code Pract. art 990 provides that it shall be the duty of the several judges of probate upon application of a creditor or any creditor of a vacant estate to cause so much of the property as may be necessary to pay the debts of the estate to be offered for sale, but this article does not contemplate sales of succession property made at the instance of succession representatives, which must, under Acts (1855) No. 56, be ordered by clerks of the district courts, and clerks of the district courts have also power to order the sale of succession property at the instance of creditors. Davie v. Scriber, 38 La. Ann. 651.

[g] Where debts are charged on the real estate by the will, the surrogate court has no jurisdiction to order a sale for their payment, since that duty devolves on another court. Smith v. Coup, 6 Dem. Surr. 45, 19 NYSt 898.

[h] Land fraudulently conveyed by decedent.—(1) An administrator desiring to sell real estate which his intestate conveyed away in his lifetime in fraud of creditors may either bring ejectment in the court of common pleas for the recovery of the land at the time of filing a suit in the probate court to sell the land, or, in one action in the court of common pleas, seek to avoid the conveyance and pray for a sale of the land; and by an election to pursue his remedy in the common pleas, he ousts the probate court of its jurisdiction. Longley v. Sewell, 4 OhS&CP 1, 2 Oh NP 376. (2) But where, in an action by an administrator to set aside conveyances made by his intestate as fraudulent, in a court of competent jurisdiction, such court decides that such conveyances were fraudulent, and should be set aside, but does not proceed further to order a sale of such property to pay debts of the estate, the administrator may then apply to the probate court to have such property sold to pay debts, since, a nullity of the conveyance having been judicially decreed, the proceeding is not one to set aside the conveyance, and to subject the land to the payment of debts, which, when coupled in one action, must be by Rev. St. §§ 6139, 6140, brought only in the common pleas. Lowman v. Sewall, 16 Oh. Cir. Ct. 466, 9 Oh. Cir. Dec. 177.

[i] Consent to exercise of jurisdiction in vacation.—Under Acts (1865–1866) p 221, declaring under what circumstances the judge may, in vacation, give direction in a case where it has become impossible to carry out the provisions of a will, the jurisdiction depends on the consent in writing of all persons in interest who are sui juris, under Civ. Code § 4855; and if a feme covert is a beneficiary under a will probated prior to the Married Woman's Act of 1866, and her husband has taken no steps to enforce his marital rights with respect to the devise made by the testator, her written consent that the judge may entertain jurisdiction of a petition for direction is essential to the validity of an order passed in vacation, authorizing the executor to sell the property of the estate. [a] Sale or mortgage.—It is also within the exclusive jurisdiction of the orphans' court having jurisdiction of the accounts of an executor or administrator to determine whether money should be raised by sale or mortgage of the real estate. Spencer v. Jennings, 114 Pa. 618, 8 A 2.

[b] Disqualification of judge of court of probate jurisdiction.—(1) Where on an application to the court of common pleas in which the administration of testator's estate was pending for the sale of land to pay debts, the judge was disqualified, and thereupon certified the cause to the circuit court as authorized by statute, such court had jurisdiction to order a sale. Meddis v. Kenney, 176 Mo. 200, 75 SW 633, 98 AmSR 496. (2) Where by reason of a supposed but not actual disqualification of the county judge a license for an administrator's sale of real estate was issued by the circuit judge, such order of sale was coram non judice, and the sale made thereunder absolutely void. Morgan v. Hammett, 23 Wis. 30.

[c] Foreclosure of mortgage.—A district court which has regularly acquired jurisdiction of a suit against an administrator to foreclose a mortgage can decree a sale of the mortgaged premises; but where the claim has been presented to the administrator and probate court, and been allowed, the mortgagee cannot go into the district court for an order of sale. Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 123.

[d] Appeal from removal of administrator.—On an appeal to the district court from an order of the county court removing an administrator, the district court acquires no jurisdiction to order a sale of the property of the estate. Levy v. Moody, (Tex. Civ. A.) 87 SW 205.

[e] A vendor's lien when established in the district court as against the estate must be collected through the probate court, and a failure to pursue such remedy results in a loss of the debt. Wall v. Club Land, etc., Co., (Tex. Civ. A.) 88 SW 534 [rev on other grounds 92 SW 984].

equity or other courts of law.[1] In the absence of statute vesting jurisdiction to order sales in the courts of probate, or in a case where such statutes do not apply, the jurisdiction for this purpose rests in the courts of equity,[2] and in a number of states the statutes have provided for the exercise of such jurisdiction by courts of equity.[3] Where the court which has ordered a sale is one which under the statute could properly have taken jurisdiction for that purpose, the presumption is always in favor of the court actually having had jurisdiction.[4] Where the court has acquired jurisdiction, it is not ousted of such jurisdiction by a cross bill of the widow for dower and the proceedings had thereunder.[5] Where jurisdiction is conferred only upon the probate court of the county where the will has been proved or administration granted, it follows that no court can take jurisdiction until a will has been proved or administration granted,[6] and it has also been held that the probate court has no authority to order a sale until there has been a grant of regular administration upon the estate, and an order directing a sale by a special administrator is void.[7]

Land outside county of administration. As a general rule the court of the county where the letters testamentary or of administration were granted and where the administration is pending has the exclusive power to order a sale of decedent's realty regardless of whether or not the land is situated within such county, if it is within the state;[8] but there are also decisions in which it has been held

[b] Breach of condition attached to devise.—The orphans' court cannot decree a sale by executors of land devised on breach of a condition attached to the devise that the devisees pay a certain sum to the executors within a stated time, as the only remedy in such case is by a bill in the chancery court. [b] The orphans' court of the city of Baltimore has jurisdiction to order the sale of land lying in the county which belonged to an intestate who resided in the city. Cain v. Miller, 117 Md. 45, 82 A 1055.
[c] Division of powers.—If the real estate is situated in another county, the court of the county where the administration is pending has power merely to authorize the executor or administrator to raise from the real estate so situated such sum of money as is necessary, designating the amount; and the orphans' court of the county where the real estate is situated, upon presentation of such decree and proper application, has the power to make the order of sale of mortgage of so much and such part of the land as will in its opinion be necessary to raise the sum specified. Under this form of procedure the orphans' court of the county having jurisdiction of the accounts has the exclusive power to pass upon the propriety of a sale or mortgage of decedent's land and the orphans' court of the county where the land is situated, being presumed to know what part and how much of the land it is necessary and expedient to sell to raise the sum specified, has jurisdiction actually to order the sale, but such jurisdiction is wholly dependent upon the decree of the court having jurisdiction of the account. Spencer v. Jennings, 114 Pa. 618, 8 A 2, 123 Pa. 184, 16 A 426; Lane v. Nelson, 79

that the application must be made to the court of the county in which the land is situated,[9] and it has also been held that the courts of the county where letters were granted and of the county where the land is situated have concurrent jurisdiction.[10]

Land in another state. A probate court of one state has no jurisdiction to order a sale of land, situated in another state.[11]

[§ 1493] 6. Parties—a. In General. It has been said that a proceeding for the sale of a decedent's property should ordinarily be adversary and not ex parte,[12] although it may be ex parte when the representative and the heirs join in a petition to sell land for assets.[13] Where there are two or more executors or administrators, all should join in a petition for an order to sell lands,[14] or if all do not join, the record should show why some have failed to join in the application.[15] If the application for a sale is made by a person other than the personal representative, the personal representative must at all events be made a party to the proceedings,[16] but the administrator and an heir cannot be joined as complainants in a bill against the other heirs to sell lands of the intestate to pay debts, the interest of the administrator and the heir being antagonistic.[17] The heirs and devisees are, as a general rule, considered necessary parties to a proceeding to sell land, whether for the payment of debts, or for distribution,[18] for the reason that the title of an heir or devisee cannot be divested by

Pa. 407 (under the act of March 29, 1832).

[a] Resignation of representative.—A decree for a sale rendered on the application of creditors is void where the administrator, by reason of his previous resignation, which has been accepted, is not before the court in his representative capacity at the time of its rendition. Wright v. Thornton, 87 Tenn. 74, 9 SW 429.

[b] Where there are no personal assets, and hence there is no qualified executor or administrator, a creditor's bill to subject realty to the payment of debts may be maintained without the presence of an executor or administrator. Plumb v. Bateman, 2 App. (D. C.) 156; Birely v. Staley, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 432, 25 AmD 303.

[c] Foreign administrators.—Although there are administrators who have been duly qualified and entered upon the performance of their duties and taken possession of the personal assets in the state of their qualification, there is no administration of which a court of another state can take judicial cognizance on a creditor's bill for the sale of realty, but it will be assumed for the purpose of such suit that there are no executors or administrators. The rule that a court of equity cannot proceed with a creditor's bill against the real estate until the executor or administrator of the personalty is made a party to the suit means an executor qualified or an administrator appointed within the jurisdiction who can be reached by the process of the court. [b] Devisees should be made parties by name.—Kilbreth v. Roots, 33 W. Va. 600, 11 SE 21.

[c] Infant heirs (1) are necessary parties. Fiske v. Kellogg, 3 Or. 503. (2) But an infant heir who has conveyed away his interest in the land is not a necessary party, for, although his deed is voidable at his election after attaining his majority, it is not void. Scruggs v. Foot, 19 S. C. 274.

[d] Heirs of deceased heir.—On an application by an administrator for the sale of lands for the payment of debts, the fact that one of the heirs had died does not authorize the appointment of an administrator ad litem to represent the estate of such heir; but the heirs of said deceased heir, as successors in title to the real estate, are the proper representatives of the interest which rethe proceedings, unless he is made a party,[19] although there is also authority for the view that the heirs or devisees are not necessary parties.[20] The widow of decedent is also a necessary party in some jurisdictions,[21] although in other jurisdictions a contrary view has been asserted.[22] A mortgagee of the land is not a necessary party to the proceedings,[23] nor is a creditor or a person supposed to have a claim against the estate,[24] or a creditor of an sided in their predecessor, and they should be made parties to the proceeding. Poole v. Daughdrill, 129 Ala. 208, 30 S 579.

[e] Life tenant and remainderman.—If testator devised land to a daughter for life with remainder to the daughter's minor child, both were necessary parties to an action to sell the land to pay testatrix's debts. Reaves v. Baker, 112 SW 609, 33 KyL 1004.

[f] Contingent remaindermen (1) in esse and within the jurisdiction of the court are necessary parties. Farr v. Gilreath, 23 S. C. 502. But compare Brickell v. Lightcap, 115 Miss. 417, 76 S 489 (neither cestui que trust nor contingent remaindermen entitled to be summoned). (2) Contingent remaindermen under the ancestor's will are not necessary parties to a petition to require the administratrix of an heir to sell the reversionary interest of such heir in the ancestor's estate to pay the heir's debts. Brown v. Kamerer, 276 Ill. 69, 114 NE 544.

[g] Where trustees for infant remaindermen are parties, it is not necessary that the infants be joined. Markle's Est., 5 Pa. Dist. 47, 17 Pa. Co. 337.

[h] Beneficiaries under will set aside.—Where infants were beneficiaries under a will which had been set aside in the circuit court, a petition by the administratrix, afterward appointed, to sell the decedent's real property for the payment of debts, properly included them as parties defendant, this being a proceeding in rem, and not one to obtain a personal judgment against the infants. Ditton v. Hart, 175 Ind. 585, 95 NE 119.

[i] The decree is not binding upon an infant heir who was not made a party as to the extent of his interest. Young v. McKinnie, 5 Fla. 542.

[j] Omission of one heir does not render sale void.—The failure to make one of the heirs a party does not render the sale void or open to collateral attack by him. Neville v. Kenney, 125 Ala. 149, 28 S 452, 82 AmSR 230.

[k] Omission cured by failure to object.—The omission to make the heirs parties was cured by their failure to make objections before the sale. Misner v. Fulshire, 21 La. Ann. 282.

[l] Where a will has worked an equitable conversion by directing land to be sold by the trustee, and the proceeds invested, a sale is valid, although infant distributees are not made parties to the suit therefor, and although the petition sought a sale on an incorrect theory, sufficient cause for sale having been alleged, and general relief prayed for. Sloan v. Baltimore Safe-Deposit, etc., Co., 73 Md. 239, 20 A 922.

[m] If the lands have been devised the devisees are the only necessary parties defendant, and an heir of the testator, having no interest in the lands, is not a necessary party. Williams v. Williams, 49 Ala. 439; Pennsylvania Co. for Ins. on Lines, etc. v. Bauerle, 143 Ill. 459, 33 NE 166.

[n] Entry of appearance by administrator for heirs.—The written consent of the heirs, neither attested nor acknowledged, to a sale of decedent's property, does not authorize the administrator to enter an appearance for them in an action by him to sell the property, especially when he is interested in a lien debt against the estate. Jenkins v. Crofton, 9 SW 406, 10 KyL 456.

[o] Death of heir who was a party.—Where the administrator and the heirs have joined in a petition to sell, the death of one of the petitioners will not vitiate the title of the purchasers, although he left minor heirs who were not made parties. Harris v. Brown, 123 N. C. 419, 31 SE 877.

[p] Where lands are specifically charged with the payment of debts by the will of the decedent, the heirs are not necessary parties to proceedings by creditors for the purpose of making their debts out of the real estate. Smith v. Wyckoff, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 49.

[q] Contingent interest.—The interest devised is too remote to make a devisee a necessary party to a suit for subjecting the property to the payment of testator's debts where it is contingent on both testator's children dying without issue and a failure of the executrix to sell the property as she is authorized by the will to do. New v. Bass, 92 Va. 383, 23 SE 747.

[r] Property fraudulently conveyed.—In an action by the creditors to sell property transferred without consideration by intestate, where the heirs at law are made parties to the action, the donees of the property to be sold are not necessary parties to the proceedings to subject the lands to payment of the debts of intestate, but are proper parties, and it would be consistent with the purpose of juridical sales to have them before the court before the order of sale is made, in order that an undisputed title may be offered, and the highest possible price may be obtained for the property. Hobbs v. Cashwell, 152 N. C. 183, 67 SE 495.

[s] A purchaser from the heirs prior to the commencement of a proceeding by the administrator for a sale to pay debts must be made a party to the proceeding in order that his rights may be cut off. Robertson v. Wheeler, (Ill.) 44 NE 870.

[t] Presumption of authority of counsel to act for heirs not served.—Where the record shows that all the heirs were represented by counsel, and the authority of the counsel to act for those not served with process is not disputed, such power will be assumed for the purpose of sustaining the jurisdiction of the court to order a sale. McMillen v. Reeves, 102 N. C. 550, 9 SE 449.

[u] Attorney for heirs absent or not represented.—(1) In a proceeding for the sale of real estate the probate court should appoint an attorney for heirs not represented. In re Simmons, 43 Cal. 543. (2) But a judgment ordering a sale at the suit of the curator, without the appointment of an attorney to represent the absent heirs, is not a nullity. Gibson v. Foster, 2 La. Ann. 503. (3) Nor, where an attorney for absent heirs was regularly appointed, does the fact that such attorney absented himself from the state during the entire conclusion of the proceedings for the settlement of the estate render a sale of the lands under order of the probate court invalid. Porter v. Hornsby, 32 La. Ann. 337. (4) So also the failure of an administrator to obtain an order of court for the sale of succession property, contradictorily with an attorney of absent heirs, is a mere irregularity and will not render the sale null and void, nor affect the purchaser. Herriman v. Janney, 31 La. Ann. 276.

[v] Where the will gave executors power to sell, but one of them refused to convey without order of court, a conveyance thereafter made in accordance with decree of court is not subject to attack, because devisees of the testator were not parties to the proceeding, for, the executor having joined in the conveyance, they needed no authority to render it valid. Virginia, etc., Coal Co. v. Charles, 251 Fed. 83 [aff 254 Fed. 379, 165 CCA 599].

[w] As against an unborn heir, a decree of sale in a suit by an administrator to subject lands to the payment of debts is not void, although such unborn heir was never made a direct party. Boal v. Wood, 70 W. Va. 383, 73 SE 978, 42 LRANS 439.

[a] Remedy of heir not made party.—If one of the heirs is not named in the petition or is not made a party to the proceedings, he may apply to be made a party in order that he may sue out an appeal, and having this remedy it cannot be said that he is deprived of his property without due process of law. Lyons v. Hamner, 84 Ala. 197, 4 S 26, 5 AmSR 363.

[a] Title of purchaser good against heir subsequently making himself known. — Where, by legal proceedings fairly conducted for a debt of the common ancestor of the parties, property has been judicially sold, the purchaser acquires a good title against an heir who subsequently makes himself known. [a] Effect of sale where widow not a party.—The sale of a whole tract of land to pay debts, made under proceedings to which the widow was not a party, passes to the purchaser no interest in her dower right therein. Kent v. Taggart, 68 Ind. 163.

[a] Where land specifically charged with payment of debts.—In a bill by a creditor of a testator's estate to obtain payment out of land specifically charged by the testator heir.[25] Where, in a proceeding to sell land to pay debts, the widow of a deceased son and heir is made a party as such, it is not necessary to the validity of the sale that she should also be made a party as administratrix of her husband's estate.[26] When the administrator of a devisee brings an action to sell the real estate acquired by the devise to pay his debts, a creditor of the original testator is neither a necessary nor a proper party defendant.[27] A person claiming land under a deed of a former administrator is not interested in the estate so as to entitle him to interfere in proceedings by a subsequent administrator to sell the land for the payment of debts.[28] A mortgagor who has parted with his title to the land mortgaged, and is not in possession thereof, is not a necessary party to a proceeding brought by the executor of the purchaser to obtain an order to sell the land for the payment of debts.[29] Any person interested in the property whose sale is sought may become a party to the proceedings on proper showing of his interest,[30] but a creditor of the estate cannot become a party plaintiff in proceedings by the representative to sell real estate to pay debts.[31] Where a wife devised certain realty to her husband for life, and other realty in fee, and after her death he conveyed and encumbered the devise in fee to such an extent that, if it was first sold, his encumbrancers and grantees would be damaged, they were proper parties defendant to a petition by the executor to sell realty to pay debts.[32] Purchasers of real estate from the widow of the owner are not proper parties to a proceeding to sell it in the administration in the owner's estate.[33] It has been held that a trust company which has possession of personal property belonging to decedent's estate is properly made a party in a petition by the administrator to sell decedent's real estate for the payment of debts.[34] Proceedings in the orphans' court against lands charged with legacies should be by the legatees themselves and the executor is not a proper party,[35] but the fact that the executor is made a party does not avoid the proceedings for want of jurisdiction, if the legatees are in fact parties.[36] In proceedings by executors to sell land under an order of the court, where four claimants intervened, asserting title to an interest in the land, and three of them voluntarily dismissed themselves from the case, the executors cannot complain of an amendment striking such claimants as parties, the executors not being prejudiced by such withdrawal.[37] Where decedent contracted to devise her realty to certain persons, and after her death, she having made such a will, her executor petitioned the probate court for leave to sell the realty to pay an inheritance tax on the devise, although the treasurer and receiver-general might have been made a party, failure to join him as such was not reversible error, the assessment of the tax commissioner having been made, and the time for appeal having expired.[38]

[§ 1494] b. Guardian of Infant. It is usually required that an infant heir or devisee of the land of which a sale is sought shall have a regular guardian, or else a guardian ad litem, to represent his interest,[39] but there is authority for the view that, if such infant has been duly cited, the nonapwith debts, all the creditors whose debts are charged upon the land and are still due should be made parties, if they are named in the will; but, if the names of other creditors cannot be ascertained by the complainant, he may in the first instance allege that fact in excuse. Smith v. Wyckoff, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 49.

[b] Person failing to establish claim.—A sale of a decedent's real estate to pay debts in an action for the settlement of the estate was not invalidated by reason of the fact that a party claiming to be a creditor was not made a party to the proceedings, where he failed to establish his claim. Costigan v. Truesdell, 119 Ky. 70, 83 SW 98, 26 KyL 971, 115 AmSR 241.

Proc. § 2752, requiring citation, in proceedings to sell decedent's land to pay debts to be issued to the "husband or wife and of all the heirs and devisees of the decedent, and also every other person claiming under them, or either of them," such a proceeding was defective for failure to make parties the judgment creditors of the heirs at law of deceased).

[a] This is true whether or not the petition shows that an heir interested is a minor. Ackley v. Dygert, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 176.

[b] Appointment and appearance of guardian sufficient.—(1) An order of sale is not void, although the name of a minor child does not appointment of a guardian to represent his interests, although an irregularity of which immediate advantage may be taken, is not of itself to be deemed a defect sufficient to invalidate the sale and prevent title from vesting in the purchaser.[40] A fortiori, where in a suit by the curator for the settlement of the estate of a decedent, all the infants interested were properly served with process, failure to name one of the infants in the order appointing a guardian ad litem, who answered for all the infants, did not render a judgment directing a sale void as to the infant omitted.[41]

[§ 1495] c. Effect of Failure to Join Necessary Parties. As a general rule a failure to join a necessary party to the proceedings to sell land renders the proceeding and the sale void, at least as to the interest of such party,[42] although where the proceeding is regarded as strictly in rem it has been held that such an omission goes only to the regularity of the proceeding and not to the jurisdiction of the court, and while it may cause the decree to be reversed on appeal or error, or set aside on direct attack, does not render the decree or the sale thereunder void or open to collateral attack.[43]

[§ 1496] 7. Petition or Other Application—a. Necessity. In respect to the subject matter the jurisdiction of the probate court to order a sale of a decedent's real estate attaches upon the filing of a petition or application containing the jurisdictional allegations,[44] and as a general rule the filing pear in the record, if the record shows the appointment and appearance of a guardian ad litem for all the minor heirs. Snevely v. Lowe, 18 Oh. 368. (2) Infants are bound where represented by guardian ad litem, although they are not served with summons, notice, or other paper. Rollins v. Brown, 37 S. C. 345, 16 SE 44 (proceedings instituted and completed before adoption of code of procedure).

[c] An order appointing a special guardian nunc pro tunc will not cure an omission to appoint one in the first instance. In re Mahoney, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 501.

[d] Failure to serve notice of application for guardian.—Failure to serve notice on certain infants of an application for the appointment of a special guardian for them, as required by statute where a petition for a sale of real property for the payment of debts was duly presented, and all parties interested including such infants were regularly cited, and the decree directing the sale and the order confirming it and directing its execution were properly made, does not affect the title of a purchaser at such sale, since the statute provides that his title is not affected by such omissions, errors, or irregularities. Fenn's Est., 8 NYCivProc 206.

[e] Sufficiency of affidavit to authorize appointment.—Robinson v. Clark, 34 SW 1083, 17 KyL 1401.

[f] Appearance by administrator.—Where land was sold to pay debts under a decree of court on the petition of the administrator, and two heirs who were minors appeared by the administrator as their next friend, the sale was void, as against the minors, their interest being antagonistic to that of the administrator. O'Conner v. Carver, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 436. But compare Harris v. Brown, 123 N. C. 419, 31 SE 877 (while it is irregular for the administrator to represent a minor heir as guardian in a proceeding to sell land for assets, yet where there is no suggestion of any unfair advantage having been taken in the sale, confirmation, or elsewhere in the proceeding, such irregularity will not vitiate the title of the purchaser).

[g] Where statutory guardian not a party but guardian ad litem appointed.—Where, in a proceeding by an administrator to sell real estate, a guardian ad litem was appointed for an infant defendant, although no affidavit was filed showing that such infant had no statutory guardian residing in the state, as required by statute, and at the sale the statutory guardian became the purchaser, the sale should be set aside as the statutory guardian was not a party to the proceeding and it was reasonable to believe that the irregularity would materially affect the salable value of the property. Catlett v. Catlett, 72 SW 781, 24 KyL 1986.

[h] Appearance of guardian without answer.—Where on application by an administratrix for permission to sell land notice was properly served upon the infant heir and upon her guardian, and the guardian appeared, the court thereupon acquired jurisdiction to order the sale, although no answer was filed by the guardian, notwithstanding a statutory provision that "no judgment can be rendered against an infant until after a defense by a guardian." [b] Truth of statements immaterial.—The jurisdiction rests upon the averments of the petition and not upon their proof, and so far as the question of jurisdiction is concerned it is immaterial whether the statements of the petition are true or not. Stuart v. Allen, 16 Cal. 473, 76 AmD 551.

[c] Prayer for sale of too much land.—The fact that the petition for the sale of land specially devised prays for the sale of too much does not affect the court's jurisdiction to order the sale. Howe v. Kern, 63 Or. 487, 125 P 834, 128 P 818.

of a petition or formal application of this complete character is a necessary prerequisite to the exercise of the power of the court to order or license a sale,[45] although it has also been held that, where on a settlement of the accounts of the representative it appears that the personal estate is insufficient to pay the debts, the court is authorized to make an order of sale of its own motion.[46]

[§ 1497] b. Requirements—(1) In General. The petition or other application for a sale must be in writing[47] and should aver all the facts requisite for giving jurisdiction in the case, or required by statute to be set forth.[48] If there is a will, this must be alleged,[49] and it has also been held necessary to show whether the widow elected to take thereunder or dissented therefrom,[50] what were the provisions of the will as to real estate,[51] and that such will does not contain a power to sell for the payment of debts;[52] but a petition for the sale of property specially devised need not set out the pro-

Annot. § 1078 subd 2, and not on affidavit, as required by L. [a] Reason for rule.—"When a petition in the probate court for the sale of the lands of a decedent for the payment of his debts shows the existence of a will, it is indispensable that it negative the existence of a power of sale in the will, for that, under the statute, is the only contingency in which the court has

bated will.[53] When the proceeding to sell real estate is instituted by a creditor, his standing as such must be averred and shown,[54] and a petition by the administrator should allege the estimated expense of administration.[55] But facts not essential or not required by statute to be set out need not be averred.[56] Thus there is no need of averring that decedent died intestate[57] or that the estate is insolvent.[58] Neither is it necessary that an administrator's petition for leave to sell realty should state how he was appointed,[59] that he was appointed by a court having power,[60] or the date of the issuance of letters;[61] but it is sufficient to state generally that he is the administrator.[62] An allegation that the premises were fraudulently conveyed is also unnecessary.[63] A creditor's petition for a sale of realty to pay debts need not allege that the executor or administrator refused to act in the matter,[64] nor is it necessary that the petition of an administrator de bonis non to sell land for the payment of debts should allege that petitioner has exhausted his remedy on the bond of the former administrator.[65] It is not an objection to the petition that it asks only for a sale instead of for permission to mortgage, lease, or sell, where it appears from the petition itself that a mortgage or lease would fail to accomplish the purpose intended.[66] An application by executors for the sale of land embracing both wild and cultivated land, one to be sold at public and the other at private sale, has been held not invalid, where the citation used in each case was published.[67] A substantial compliance with the statutory requirements as to what a petition for the sale of property shall contain is sufficient,[68] and defects, irregularities, or omissions not amounting to a failure to show jurisdictional facts do not deprive the court of jurisdiction or render the judgment subject to collateral attack, although they may be cause for reversal,[69] but the failure of an application for an order of the probate court for the sale of a decedent's land to allege facts giving the court jurisdiction renders void an order issued thereon or a sale made in pursuance of such order.[70] If either of two petitions for an administrator's sale was sufficient to sustain an order, the sale will be upheld where both appeared to have been pending when the sale was ordered.[71] It has been held no objection to an administrator's petition for leave to sell real estate that it was in the form of a bill in chancery.[72] An executor cannot, in his petition to sell real estate, tender an issue on a claim which has not been filed and the validity of which is disputed by the heirs or beneficiaries, especially where the executor himself is interested in the claim.[73]

[§ 1498] (2) Averments as to Heirs or Devisees. It is commonly required that the petition shall name and describe the heirs or devisees,[74] and

[b] Where the petition refers to the will, which is of record, and makes the will a part of the petition, and the will contains no such power, this supplies an averment, omitted from the petition as to the lack of power. [c] Omission to file inventories, etc.—The filing in the probate court of a petition by an administrator for the sale of real estate to pay debts gives the court jurisdiction over the real estate, and the omission of the administrator to file with the petition the inventory, appraisement, lists, and accounts of the estate, as required by the statute, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction or render the sale void. show whether any of them, and if so which, are infants, married women, lunatics, or otherwise under any disability.[75] A petition giving the degree of the relationship of the heirs and not setting forth the proportionate interest of each has been held to be sufficient.[76] Where the statute requires the petition to state the residence of the heirs or devisees, it is not sufficient to state the "address" of nonresident heirs who are to be served by publication.[77] Where the statute positively requires the petition to name and describe the heirs, an omission to comply with this requirement is jurisdictional and renders the decree void,[78] but where such statements are not required by the statute, their omission does not invalidate the decree, although the better practice is that these matters should be set forth.[79] The failure of a petition to allege, as required by statute, that the persons named as devisees and legatees therein were the only heirs, did not render the order of sale fatally defective where the required statement appeared in the order.[80]

[g] Statement on information and belief.—An application by an administrator to sell lands which avers that certain persons named are the heirs to the best of the petitioner's knowledge, information, and belief is sufficient. Townsend v. Steel, 85 Ala. 580, 5 S 351; Greenblatt v. Hermann, 144 N. Y. 13, 38 NE 966 [rev 69 Hun 298, 23 NYS 565].

[h] Statement of lack of knowledge.—An application by a widow which alleges that the names and number of heirs at law of the deceased are not known, and that she does not know of any persons claiming to be such, is insufficient to enable the court to order the sale, where there is no statement that any effort has been made to ascertain the heirs, nor as to whom the heirs were of whom petitioner heard many years ago. Matter of O'Neill, 49 Misc. 285, 99 NYS 237, 5 Mills Surr. 240.

[a] Illustration.—A petition averring that two of the distributees of the estate are married women, but not stating the ages, severally, of the husbands and wives, and averring that four others of the distributees are minors, and in no way showing whether the wives and husbands are minors, is fatally defective. Page v. Matthews, 41 Ala. 719.

[b] Mode of objecting.—Objections that the bill was defective because it did not state which of the parties were married women, and because a minor child should have been made a party, should be raised by demurrer or some pleading or motion by the parties affected thereby. Johnson v. Porterfield, 150 Ala. 532, 43 S 828.

[c] It is not a jurisdictional defect that the petition fails to state: (1) Which heirs are of full age. Field v. Goldsby, 28 Ala. 218, 65 AmD 341. (2) Which heirs are married women. Curtis v. Hunt, 158 Ala. 78, 48 S 598.

[a] Liability to waste or perishable nature.—Under the statute authorizing the sale of the personal property, when liable to waste or when it is of a perishable nature, an averment that the property is "of a character liable to waste, or be consumed by fire" is sufficient. Harris v. Parker, 41 Ala. 604.

[b] Necessity for payment of debts.—An application which shows on its face that a sale is necessary for the purpose of paying the debts of the estate is sufficient. Hatcher v. Clifton, 33 Ala. 301.

[c] A petition which merely shows that the sale will be advantageous to the estate, without showing any of the statutory reasons therefor, as that it is necessary to pay debts, is defective. Gillenwaters v. Scott, 62 Tex. 670.

[d] Necessity for sale of whole.—To authorize a sale of the real estate where the debts amount to less than the value of the whole, it must be alleged in the petition that the residue would be greatly depreciated by a sale of less than the whole. In re Snow, 96 Me. 570, 53 A 116.

[e] Insufficient allegation of benefit to estate.—A statute providing for the sale of land to pay debts when it was "more beneficial to the estate to sell the lands than slaves" was not complied with by a petition alleging that it was "more to the interest of all the parties to sell the house and lots than the personal estate." Robertson v. Bradford, 70 Ala. 385.

[f] Certainty of allegations.—A petition is sufficient where it alleges: (1) That the "opinion and belief" of the representative is necessary to sell for the payment of debts. Reynolds v. Kirkland, 44 Ala. 312 (collateral attack). (2) That it would "probably" take all the slaves of the estate to pay the debts. King v. Kent, 29 Ala. 542 (collateral attack). (3) Necessary facts on information and belief of petitioner, a creditor, without stating the grounds of his information, or alleging diligent inquiry to ascertain the truth of the facts stated. In re Merchant, 6 NYS 875. (4) A petition by an executor stating only that he "believes" a sale to be necessary is insufficient. Hall v. Hall, 47 Ala. 290.

Johnson v. Buck, 220 Ill. 226, 77 NE 163.

82. Alvarez v. Warner, (Ala.) 77 S 344; Ikelheimer v. Chapman, 32 Ala. 676; Scott v. Royston, 223 Mo. 568, 123 SW 454.

[a] Petition sufficiently stating purpose.—A petition by the widow and adult children and the guardian of minor children, which alleges decedent's death, his indebtedness, and the widow's inability to manage, pay the taxes on the homestead, and which prays for the sale of a part of the homestead to pay the indebtedness, etc., is a petition for the sale of the real estate to pay debts. Scott v. Royston, 223 Mo. 568, 123 SW 454.

[b] A joinder of different grounds of sale, as for partition and payment of debts, in the same bill or petition will not affect the validity of the sale, although the practice is irregular. Kindell v. Titus, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 727.

[c] Statement not invalidating petition.—Where the petition for a sale of land to pay debts shows on its face that there is not enough personal property to pay the alleged debts and the prayer is confined to leave to sell to pay debts and charges of administration, the petition is not rendered void because of a statement therein that "in petitioning to sell all the real estate of said deceased, he [the petitioner] does it with a view to the distribution of the balance over and above the amount necessary to pay the debts." [a] The amount of claims allowed should be stated. Lynch v. Hickey, 13 Ill. A. 139.

[b] Sufficient allegation.—An allegation "that there are debts now standing against said estate, which have been allowed, to the amount of —— dollars, and that there are no assets in petitioner's hands, the personal property being all exhausted, wherewith to pay said debts, without selling real estate," is sufficient. Moffitt v. Moffitt, 69 Ill. 641.

[c] Failure to specify how debt incurred.—A petition which shows a claim allowed against the estate, without specifying whether the debt was incurred as surety or principal, is sufficient in that respect after verdict. Jackson v. Weaver, 98 Ind. 307.

[d] Petition several years after the death of decedent.—On an application by an administrator for an order of the surrogate for a sale of real estate to pay debts, after a lapse of several years from the death of the debtor, the petition must show that such debts have been recently discovered, and, if six years have elapsed, that they are not barred by the statute. Gilchrist v. Rea, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 66.

[e] Failure of the petition to state all the claims does not render the judgment subject to collateral attack. Myers v. Davis, 47 Iowa 325.

[f] A particular description of each debt is not necessary (1) but a statement of the aggregate amount of the debts is sufficient. Collins v. Farnworth, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 575; State v. Ramsey County Prob. Ct., 19 Minn. 117 [foll Spencer v. Sheehan, 19 Minn. 338]; Puckett v. Wynns, 132 Tenn. 513, 178 SW 1184; Cooley v. Cooley, (Tenn. Ch. A.) 37 SW 1028. (2) "It would have been more regular, as well as more proper, to have set out each specific debt, and to whom due, but as there was no exception, and an aggregate of indebtedness was ascertained over the amount of assets, which showed the necessity of the sale of a greater amount of the land than was then decreed to be sold to satisfy the same, we do not think the case should be reversed on this account." Doherty v. Choate, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 192, 199.

[g] These requirements are directory only: (1) Jackson v. Houston, 84 Tex. 622, 19 SW 799; Kleinecke v. Woodward, 42 Tex. 311. (2) A failure to conform to them is not sufficient to invalidate a sale made under the authority of the probate court having jurisdiction of the estate. Jackson v. Houston, 84 Tex. 622, 19 SW 799. (3) So an administrator's petition, not demurred to below, to sell realty to pay a judgment against the estate, was sufficient, where it alleged that there was no personalty, and that the cost of administration was a certain sum, although it did not allege that a claim was ever filed against the estate or presented to the administrator. Maris v. Wolfe, 46 Ind. A. 416, 92 NE 661.

[h] Statement of amount not necessary.—The existence of debts should be alleged but it is not necessary to state the amount. Cotton v. Holloway, 96 Ala. 544, 12 S 172 [mod Quarles v. Campbell, 72 Ala. 64, and overr Abernathy v. O'Reilly, 90 Ala. 495, 7 S 919].

[i] Claims to be presented.—It is unnecessary to set out an estimate of the amount of just claims to be presented, where all claims not filed are barred because more than one year has expired between the date of the granting of letters of administration and the filing of the petition. Rice v. Davies, 201 Ill. A. 165.

[j] Failure to show mortgage.—A petition which sets out all the facts showing the indebtedness to the petitioner is sufficient to confer jurisdiction, although it does not show a mortgage against the property and does not name the mortgagees as parties. Matter of Ibert, 48 App. Div. 510, 62 NYS 1051.

[k] Overstatement of debts.—A sale is not vitiated by the fact that the application therefor set forth a larger amount of debts as being due than really existed, where the sale was necessary to pay the actual debts. Simonin v. Czarnowski, 47 La. Ann. 1334, 17 S 847.

[l] Petition by creditor.—Under a statute requiring the petition of a creditor for the sale of the real estate to set forth, as nearly as the petitioner can on diligent inquiry ascertain them, the debts and names of creditors, the amount of funeral expenses, and to whom due, jurisdiction is acquired by the statement of a debt due the petitioner, and if he has no knowledge on the subject of the funeral expenses he need make no allusion to them. In re German Bank, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 181.

[m] In a petition to sell for the family allowance and future expenses of administration, where the prior accounts of the administrator have been settled, an averment that there are no debts or expenses accrued and unpaid is a sufficient statement of the debts, expenses, and charges of administration. Richardson v. Butler, 82 Cal. 174, 23 P 9, 16 AmSR 101.

[n] The filing of a list of debts, for the payment of which succession property is to be ordered sold, is necessary only in case the order of sale is to be made by the clerk or his chief deputy and not by the judge himself. Thibodaux v. Barrow, 129 La. 395, 56 S 339.

[o] Mode of objecting.—A motion at the close of the trial, to the effect that the petition does not state facts enough to make a case for the sale of decedent's real property to pay a debt, does not raise the question of the sufficiency of the petition to establish the debt, the inference to be drawn from the objection being that petitioner had a claim, but not such as would authorize a sale of real property to pay it. In re Pirie, 198 N. Y. 209, 91 NE 587, 19 AnnCas 672 [aff 133 App. Div. 431, 117 NYS 753] (holding also that neither a motion at the opening of the trial to dismiss a petition by a creditor on the ground that it appeared that limitations had run, nor a motion after the trial that it was affirmatively shown that limitations had run against the claim, raised the question of the sufficiency of the petition to establish the existence of a debt).

[a] Notes secured by trust deed.—An application for an order of sale which states that the notes evidencing petitioner's claim are secured by a trust deed, describing such deed and notes, and that the claim had been allowed by the administrator, is sufficient, without setting forth the instruments verbatim, and need not allege that the trust deed was allowed by the administrator and approved by the court. Henry v. Drought, 10 Tex. Civ. A. 379, 30 SW 584.

[b] Discrepancy held not fatal.—The discrepancy in a petition to sell land to pay debts between an averment that the claims sought to be satisfied were allowable in 1871 and the executor's account, filed as an exhibit showing such allowance, and a list of claims, also filed as an exhibit, showing that most of the claims were allowed in 1877, six years after decedent's death, is not fatal, it not appearing that any and it must also be shown that a sale is necessary for their payment.[85] A further requirement is sometimes found that the petition shall name all the known creditors.[86] If land is to be sold, the insufficiency of the personalty and the necessity of resorting to the realty for payment of the debts must also be made to appear,[87] although it has been held that if these facts are necessarily inferred from the averments in the petition, the failure of the petition to state them affirmatively does not impair its validity.[88] It is also usually required that the amount and value of the personal estate shall be made to appear,[89] and it is sometimes required that the application of the personalty shall claims allowed in 1877 were not filed within the statutory period and kept alive so that limitations did not run against them. Frier v. Lowe, 232 Ill. 622, 83 NE 1083 [rev 119 Ill. A. 246].

Pa.—O'Brian v. Wiggins, 10 Kulp 125.

Utah.—Needham v. Salt Lake City, 7 Utah 319, 26 P 920.

[a] Statement of facts showing necessity.—The necessity for the sale is not a matter for the executor or administrator to determine, but is a conclusion which the court itself must draw from the facts stated, and the petition must furnish the materials for its judgment. The insufficiency of the personalty must be shown by a statement of the facts as to its amount and disposition and as to the outstanding debts and charges, and the necessity for the sale of the whole or some portion of the real property by a description of all the real property of which decedent died seized and a statement of its condition and value as required by statute. Haynes v. Meeks, 20 Cal. 288.

[b] If there is no personalty, its existence should be clearly negatived, and an averment simply that there are no tangible assets wherefrom payment can be made is not sufficient. Gladson v. Whitney, 9 Iowa 267.

[c] Failure to show validity of payments reducing personalty.—An administrator's petition to sell real estate to pay debts which shows that there are unpaid claims established against the estate which the personalty is insufficient to pay is not subject to demurrer because it fails to show that certain payments for which he claims credit were legal and valid, although, if such payments were stricken out, the personalty would be sufficient to pay all established claims against the estate. Conger v. Cook, 56 Iowa 117, 8 NW 782.

[d] A petition by an administrator de bonis non which alleges that there are just debts and charges against the estate, and that no personalty came into his hands is sufficient without also alleging that there is an insufficiency of personal assets in the original administrator's hands. Beniteau v. Dodsley, 88 Mich. 152, 50 NW 110.

[e] Petition in former proceeding showing insufficiency.—Where a petition to the orphans' court to sell decedent's real estate at private sale was defective in not alleging that the personal estate was not sufficient to pay decedent's debts, a prior petition by an administrator to sell the real estate at public sale, on which no order of sale was effected, was not admissible in evidence, since the fact that the court in some prior proceeding had jurisdiction to sell the property, which it did not exercise, in no way tended to show that it had jurisdiction in a subsequent proceeding. O'Brian v. Wiggins, 10 Kulp (Pa.) 125.

[f] Following language of statute.—"The petition for the sale of the land averred that the personal property of the estate was insufficient for the payment of the debts of the deceased, and that the sale of the land was necessary for that purpose. In averment the petition substantially followed the language of the statute. Code 1896, § 156. In Cotton v. Holloway, 96 Ala. 544, 12 S 172, the averment in the petition as to insufficiency of personal property and the necessity to sell the land for the payment of debts was the same as in the case before us, and it was there held, on collateral attack of the decree of the court, that the averments were sufficient to confer jurisdiction." Peavy v. Griffin, 152 Ala. 256, 258, 44 S 400, 401.

[g] Petitions held sufficient.—Garrow v. Toxey, 171 Ala. 644, 54 S 556; In re Bentz, 36 Cal. 687; Stanley v. Noble, 59 Iowa 666, 13 NW 839; Morrow v. Weed, 4 Iowa 77, 66 AmD 122; Gibson v. McCormick, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 65; Howe v. Kern, 63 Or. 487, 125 P 834, 128 P 818.

[h] In a proceeding by a creditor, such an allegation is not necessary. Tessier v. Wyse, 3 Bland (Md.) 28, 44 ("It clearly lays with the heir only to allege and shew that fact [existence of sufficient personalty] for his own benefit").

Meadows v. Meadows, 73 Ala. 356. (2) Where the petition alleged that the value of the personal estate was not more than fifty dollars and that the debts and expenses of administration to be paid would amount to four hundred and forty dollars this was sufficient. In re Bentz, 36 Cal. 687. (3) A petition for leave to sell real estate, describing certain lands, and averring that such lands were all the property of the deceased (a nonresident) in such county, so far as known, and that the debts and charges amounted at least to a sum certain, sufficiently averred that the personalty was insufficient. McNeill v. McBryde, 112 N. C. 408, 16 SE 841.

[b] The filing of an account of personal property, at or about the date of the filing of the petition, does not supply the place of a statement of such property in the petition, unless the account is especially referred to therein. Gregory v. Taber, 19 Cal. 397, 79 AmD 219.

[c] Sufficient statement.—A petition of an administrator to sell real estate for the payment of debts, stating that "the amount of personal property which has come to his hands as appraised by the inventory is," etc., sufficiently states the amount of personal property which actually came into his hands, as required by statute. Richmond v. Foote, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 244.

[d] Petition must show an inventory.—Ackley v. Dygert, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 176.

[e] A true and correct inventory and appraisement of all the personal property must be exhibited to the court. O'Brian v. Wiggins, 10 Kulp (Pa.) 125.

[f] Reference to inventory.—A petition which states that the inventory on file contains a full description of the personal estate and refers to such inventory and makes it a part of the petition is sufficient. In re Bentz, 36 Cal. 687; Stuart v. Allen, 16 Cal. 473, 76 AmD 551.

[g] Inaccuracies and omissions.—Although a petition sets forth inaccurately the personal property, or omits valuable portions thereof, yet if it purports on its face to set forth the whole of it, and the amount, if any, undisposed of, the order of sale made thereon cannot be attacked. Haynes v. Meeks, 20 Cal. 288.

[h] The fact that there has been a previous administrator does not relieve the second administrator from be shown.[90] Where the statute requires the actual exhaustion of the personalty in the payment of debts before a sale of realty is authorized,[91] such exhaustion must be made to appear by the petition,[92] but otherwise it is sufficient if the petition shows merely that the personalty is insufficient.[93] Where a sale of land for partition is asked for, the petition must show that it cannot be fairly divided.[94]

[§ 1500] (4) Averments as to Realty. As a general rule the statutes require that a petition for the sale of land of a decedent to pay debts shall contain a description of the land a sale of which is sought, which must be accurate and specific, or at least describe the land with sufficient certainty to identify it,[95] and it is also required in some states that the petition shall show the condition[96] and the necessity of a compliance to the extent of his ability with the statutory requirements as to a statement of the personal property in a petition for a sale of the realty. He must show not merely the personal property which has come into his possession since his appointment but also to the extent of his ability that which came into the hands of his predecessor. Haynes v. Meeks, 20 Cal. 288.

[i] When omission not fatal.—In an action to sell decedent's interest in land to pay his debts, on the ground of deficiency of personalty, an omission to state in the petition the amount of personalty is not fatal where the petition also prays for the sale, on the ground of indivisibility, for apportionment among the heirs. Rodgers v. Rodgers, 31 SW 139, 17 KyL 358.

[j] Where the records of the surrogate's court show the amount of personalty which came into the hands of the administrator such amount need not be set forth in a petition by the administrator for leave to sell realty for the payment of debts. Forbes v. Halsey, 26 N. Y. 53. To same effect Jackson v. Crawfords, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 533.

[k] Statement of value of personalty not necessary.—Cotton v. Holloway, 96 Ala. 544, 12 S 172 [overr Abernathy v. O'Reilly, 90 Ala. 495, 7 S 919].

90. Gladson v. Whitney, 9 Iowa 267; Ackley v. Dygert, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 176.

[a] Sufficiency of petition.—(1) Under a statute requiring a petition by an administrator for a sale of realty to pay debts to state the amount of personalty that has come into petitioner's hands, the application thereof, and the amount which may yet be realized, a petition stating that the amount of personalty was insufficient to pay debts, that the amount which had come into petitioner's hands was ten dollars, that he had proceeded with reasonable diligence in converting the personalty into money and applying it to the debts, and that the only indebtedness of decedent was petitioner's claim, amounting to one thousand five hundred and fifty-nine dollars, was sufficient, although it did not state specifically what application had been made of the personalty, or the amount which might yet be realized. Matter of Williams, 1 Misc. 35, 22 NYS 906, 1 Pow. Surr. 284. (2) An administrator's petition to sell real estate to pay debts, stating the amount of the personal assets received, and "that it is still in my hands unpaid and unapplied," sufficiently shows the application of the personal estate as required by statute. Richmond v. Foote, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 244.

92. Kindell v. Titus, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 727; Wallace v. Grant, 27 Wash. 130, 67 P 578.

[a] Petition showing that personalty not exhausted.—A petition stating merely that petitioner had sold "all the personal property of said estates that in his judgment is advisable to sell at the present time" was insufficient to authorize a mortgage of decedent's property. Wallace v. Grant, 27 Wash. 130, 67 P 578.

[b] Exhaustion of "available" personalty.—An allegation that "all personal property available" has been exhausted implies that there is personal property not yet applied to the payment of debts. Marks v. Wilson, 72 Or. 5, 143 P 906.

[a] An allegation that land cannot be divided "fairly" is sufficient under a statute providing for a sale when the land cannot be divided equitably. Warnock v. Thomas, 48 Ala. 463. See also Satcher v. Satcher, 41 Ala. 26, 9 AmD 498 (allegation that land could not be "fairly, beneficially, and equitably divided" is sufficient).

[b] Averment held sufficient.—An averment in the petition of an executor that "the said real estate cannot be advantageously divided among the numerous devisees of said testator" is sufficient under a statute which provides for a sale of property jointly owned if "the property cannot be divided without materially impairing its value or the value of the plaintiff's interest therein," when taken with other averments in the petition which show that, as a matter of fact, the property cannot be divided without materially impairing its value. Zehnder v. Schoenbachler, 70 SW 278, 24 KyL 947.

[c] Insufficient allegation.—An allegation in a petition that the sale is sought "to enable the administrator to settle up said estate and satisfy all the heirs" is not sufficient. Flanagan v. Pierce, 27 Tex. 78.

[a] Effect of failure to describe land.—(1) A deed based on a sale by an administrator on a petition to the probate court that does not describe the land, and on an order in response to such petition also failing to describe the land, is void. Roberts v. Thomason, 174 Mo. 378, 74 SW 624. (2) Where, in a suit by the curator for the settlement of the estate of decedent, the petition alleged that he did not know the debts or the boundaries of the land, and the report of the commissioners to report the debts and the boundary of the land which gave the debts and the boundary of the land was confirmed, a judgment directing a sale of the land described therein by metes and bounds as in the survey filed by the commissioner was not void because the land was not described in the petition. Ison v. Halcomb, 136 Ky. 523, 124 SW 813.

[b] Sale of equity of redemption.—An administrator's sale of a deceased mortgagor's equity of redemption is invalid if the petition to the probate court for leave to sell does not correctly describe the land. Rainey v. McQueen, 121 Ala. 191, 25 S 920.

[c] Where power of sale given by will.—The fact that the bill did not set out and describe the property of the testator is not fatal to the jurisdiction to decree a sale, where the will vested the executors with the widest discretion as to selling the property, and the application was by them to the chancellor for aid in the execution of their trust. Allen v. Shanks, 90 Tenn. 359, 16 SW 715.

[d] An imperfect description in the petition, which is true so far as it goes, and which may have been amended in the probate court or perfected by the aid of facts judicially known to the courts, is not fatal to the validity of the proceedings. Smith v. Flournoy, 47 Ala. 345.

[e] The petition may refer to the inventory (1) for a description of the real estate and the condition and value thereof and both may be considered together. Wilson v. Hastings, 66 Cal. 243, 5 P 217; Stuart v. Allen, 16 Cal. 473, 76 AmD 551. (2) But where a petition contains no description of the real estate or its condition, or the value and the reference to the inventory is for greater certainty, this is insufficient to incorporate the inventory with the petition and cure the omission to describe the realty. Wilson v. Hastings, 66 Cal. 243, 5 P 217.

[f] Descriptions held sufficient.—Richardson v. Butler, 82 Cal. 174, 23 P 9, 16 AmSR 101; Wilkin v. Simmons, (Tex. Civ. A.) 151 SW 1145.

[g] Descriptions held insufficient.—Rucker v. Tennessee Coal, etc., R. Co., 176 Ala. 456, 58 S 465; Little v. Marx, 145 Ala. 620, 39 S 517; Kornegay v. Mayer, 135 Ala. 141, 33 S 36; Henley v. Johnston, 134 Ala. 646, 32 S 1009, 92 AmSR 48 (failure to indicate with accuracy the section, township, and range in which lands located); Gilchrist v. Shackelford, 72 Ala. 7; Wilson v. Hastings, 66 Cal. 243, 5 P 217; Hazelton v. Bogardus, 8 Wash. 102, 35 P 602 (sale void where petition for and order of sale describe land as located in a certain township and county, when there is no such township in that county, and there is nothing, aside from such description, to indicate any certain piece of land).

[a] Statements held sufficient.—In re Levy, 141 Cal. 639, 75 P 317; In re Devincenzi, 119 Cal. 498, 51 P 845 ("fair"); Richardson v. Butler, 82 Cal. 174, 23 P 9, 16 AmSR 101 ("unimproved").

value[97] of the land, and whether or not it is occupied, and if occupied, the names of the occupants.[98] It has also been required that the petition shall show whether decedent had any other real estate than that described therein,[99] and even that it shall describe all the lands of decedent.[1] It should also be alleged that the land sought to be sold lies within the jurisdiction of the court.[2] The petition must show that decedent had some title to, or interest in, the land sought to be sold,[3] and it is sometimes required that it shall show what this title or interest is.[4] But on the other hand it has been held that the representative's petition for leave to sell includes any interest which the decedent had in the lands described,[5] and hence the petition need not set out

[b] Statement held insufficient.—An allegation that decedent died seized of certain described real estate, less right of way of Northern Pacific Railway Company and parcel set apart for school ground, and appraised at two thousand dollars, was too indefinite as a statement of the condition of the real estate. Plains Land, etc., Co. v. Lynch, 38 Mont. 271, 99 P 847, 129 AmSR 645.

[c] Negative averments.—A petition for leave to sell real estate need not show that it is not cultivated, improved, or built upon, or that it has no water power or other natural advantages. Spencer v. Sheehan, 19 Minn. 338.

[d] Objection cannot be first raised on appeal.—Where no objection was urged at the trial that the petition did not contain a proper statement of the condition of the property such objection cannot be considered upon appeal, but the petition must be treated as properly describing such condition. Baum v. Roper, 132 Cal. 42, 64 P 128.

[d] Statement of appraised value.—(1) Where a petition stated that the value of the land was set forth in a schedule attached to the petition, an objection that the values so set forth were the appraised values, and not the present values, was not available on general demurrer. In re Levy, 141 Cal. 639, 75 P 317. (2) Where an appraisement of the real estate had been made less than a year prior to the presentation of a petition to sell it to pay debts, an allegation that decedent died seized of certain described real estate, less railroad right of way and parcel set apart for school ground, and appraised at the sum of two thousand dollars, sufficiently indicated that the property to be sold had been appraised at two thousand dollars, and was a sufficient statement of present value. Plains Land, etc., Co. v. Lynch, 38 Mont. 271, 99 P 847, 129 AmSR 645.

[e] Requirement not jurisdictional.—(1) Plains Land, etc., Co. v. Lynch, 38 Mont. 271, 99 P 847, 129 AmSR 645. (2) "Section 1537 of the Code of Civil Procedure enumerates the several matters and things necessary to be stated in the verified petition by the administrator for the sale of real estate, among which is, that he shall state 'the condition and value thereof.' It is further provided in that section that if any of the matters enumerated cannot be ascertained, they must be stated in the petition, but a failure to set forth the facts so enumerated will not invalidate the subsequent proceedings if the defect be supplied by the proofs at the hearing and the general facts showing that such sale is necessary, or that such sale is for the advantage, benefit, and best interest of the estate and those interested therein, be stated in the decree. We regard the case of Burris v. Kennedy, 108 Cal. 331, 41 P 458, as being decisive of the question presented. If it be admitted, as claimed by respondents, that some of the expressions in that opinion were not necessary to a determination of the case, the fact remains, however, that the reasoning employed by the distinguished justice who in that opinion spoke for the court is most convincing. It is there held that no sale is invalid on account of the omission to state in the petition any of the matters enumerated, provided the general facts showing that a sale is necessary are proven and found; that the necessity for a sale is the prime factor for consideration; that the question of value can throw no light upon such question of necessity; that, at most, it is a matter required to be stated to enable the court to exercise its discretion more intelligently after it has determined the sale to be necessary; that a petition setting forth the facts showing the necessity for a sale and a decree thereon imports a finding of their truth, and that evidence to that effect was given at the hearing; and it must follow that a like intendment exists in relation to those matters about which the court should take testimony that it might intelligently exercise a discretion as to the amount of property which should be ordered sold under the circumstances of the case, for it is manifest that the statement of value could only be important in connection with the exercise of such discretion." Dane v. Layne, 10 Cal. A. 366, 370, 101 P 1067.

[f] Insufficient statement.—A petition alleging merely that the land "is unimproved desert land," and "is chiefly valuable for the possibility that it may contain petroleum," without either stating its value or that its value could not be ascertained, and which is unaided by any direct finding of value, is substantially defective as against a direct attack upon appeal from the order of sale. [a] An omission to describe one tract of land owned by testator, of which the petitioners neither knew nor could have known by diligent inquiry, does not render a creditor's petition fatally defective. In re Faulkner, 57 Hun 586, 10 NYS 325.

[b] Reference to inventory.—Where an inventory, referred to as part of the petition, does not contain a sufficient description of all decedent's real property to identify it, it will be insufficient as a basis for such an order of sale, although it correctly describes the parcel to be sold. Wilson v. Hastings, 66 Cal. 243, 5 P 217.

[c] Where the answer states that certain real estate is omitted from the schedule attached to the petition, and there is no replication, the petition to sell must be dismissed under a statute requiring that on an application for a sale the representative shall exhibit to the court "a full and correct statement of all the real estate of such decedent." In re Eddy, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 55.

[d] A statement of the real estate which decedent died "leaving" is a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring the petition to state what real estate the decedent "may have died seized of." McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 352, 21 L. ed. 341.

2. Williams v. Williams, 49 Ala. 439.

[a] Judicial knowledge aiding petition.—If the lands are so described in the petition that the court, aided by its judicial knowledge of the surveys of the public lands, must know that they are situated in the county, this is sufficient to support the jurisdiction of the court. Money v. Turnipseed, 50 Ala. 499.

[b] Description leaving no difficulty in identification.—If such a description is given as will leave no real difficulty in identifying the lands intended, it will be sufficient, especially if no objection is interposed before the final order of sale has been made. De Bardelaben v. Stoudenmire, 48 Ala. 643.

[b] Petition held sufficient.—A petition which averred that decedent "died seized and possessed of the following described real estate, to wit: Certain interest and rights, not definitely known to your petitioner in and to about forty-eight tracts of land," etc., sufficiently showed that decedent had a legal or equitable interest in the lands sought to be sold. Henley v. Johnston, 134 Ala. 646, 32 S 1009, 92 AmSR 48.

[c] Descendible estate.—An allegation that intestate at the time of his death was entitled to a vested remainder in fee of the residence place in which his widow, defendant, has a life estate, is sufficient as an allegation of an estate in the intestate "which by law would descend to his heirs," with a statute making them liable for the payment of his debts. Elliott v. Shuler, 50 Fed. (U. S.) 454.

the precise character of decedent's interest,[6] or the encumbrances to which the premises are subject.[7] Statements as to the real estate need not be made positively and unqualifiedly to give jurisdiction,[8] and in some jurisdictions a failure of the petition to describe or sufficiently to describe the land is not fatal to the petition.[9]

[§ 1501] (5) Signing and Verification. The petition or application should ordinarily be signed by the executor or administrator[10] and verified by his oath or affidavit.[11] The lack of verification is not, however, a jurisdictional defect,[12] but a mere irregularity which is not ground for collateral attack.[13]

[§ 1502] c. Filing. The petition must be filed in the court having jurisdiction to order a sale.[14] The time for filing is regulated by statutes or local practice varying somewhat in the different jurisdictions.[15]

[§ 1503] d. Amendment. The court may allow an amendment of the petition,[16] but omissions constituting a jurisdictional defect cannot be supplied by amendment.[17] Where the petition fails to give the names of the heirs, an amendment of this defect should not be allowed without notice to the heirs.[18] The filing of an amended petition to sell real estate to pay debts amounts to a dismissal of all petitions previously filed, and such amended petition is to be considered as an original petition.[19] If by reason of an amendment a contestant is embarrassed in his defense or the condition of the case is so changed as to render new pleas or further evidence necessary, the court on his application should postpone a further hearing of the case, and give him time to file new pleas and take further evidence.[20]

[§ 1504] e. Curing of Defects. Defects, omissions, or other irregularities in the petition may be cured by the order, the finding, or by the other papers on the record;[21] but where the petition is

[a] Bringing in new parties.—Under a statute providing that if it appears to the surrogate that any person claiming an interest is not named in the petition, the citation must also be directed to him, the omission to name, in a petition for the sale of real estate, one claiming an interest under the heirs of the decedent, is not fatal, but the petition may be amended or supplemental citation issued. Matter of Wheeler, 48 Misc. 323, 96 NYS 762, 5 Mills Surr. 141. But compare Crabtree v. Niblett, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 488 (omission to make heirs parties not curable by amendment).

[b] Adding names of creditors.—The names of creditors of the estate, not known at the time of filing the petition, may be subsequently added. In re Faulkner, 10 NYS 325 [mod on other grounds 127 N. Y. 296, 27 NE 1055].

[c] Setting up mortgage.—A surrogate has power to allow the amendment of a petition by setting up a mortgage executed by the heirs of the decedent, and to issue a supplemental citation bringing in the mortgagees as parties, although the statute of limitations has run against the institution of a new proceeding. Matter of Ibert, 48 App. Div. 510, 62 NYS 1051.

[d] Amendment after death of representative.—Where, after the order confirming an administrator's sale to pay debts and the order to make title, the administrator dies, the probate court has no authority to entertain a motion by the purchaser to make an amendment of the pleadings, so as to include another tract alleged to have been omitted by mistake. Stafford v. Harris, 72 N. C. 198.

[e] Amendment of description after sale.—(1) Where a mistake has been made in the description of a decedent's lands sold under a probate decree, whether in the petition, order, or other proceedings, the court ordering the sale has authority to correct it on the application of the purchaser or anyone claiming under him. Brown v. Williams, 87 Ala. 353, 6 S 111; Lee v. Williams, 85 Ala. 189, 3 S 718. (2) But the personal representative is not authorized to file such an application, he being only a party defendant to it. Lee v. Williams, 85 Ala. 189, 3 S 718.

[f] Amendment as to property included on parol evidence.—Where the petition, order of sale, confirmation of sale, and order to make title is for a single tract of land identified and made certain by boundaries and description, the pleadings cannot be amended at the instance of the purchaser and on parol evidence so as to include another distinct tract of land claimed to have been omitted by mistake. [a] On a direct attack on the sufficiency of a petition for a sale of real estate for payment of debts, by appeal from the order of sale, the order will not supply deficiencies of the petition under a statute providing that a failure to set forth facts in the petition will not invalidate the subsequent proceedings if the de-

[§ 1505] f. Collateral Attack on Sufficiency. The sufficiency of the petition is a matter to be determined by the court to which it is presented, and, while it may be investigated there and on appeal, it cannot be questioned collaterally.[23]

[§ 1506] 8. Citation or Notice—a. Necessity. In the absence of any statutory requirement, notice of proceedings for a sale of a decedent's realty is not necessary,[24] but it is usually required that a citation or notice of the application to sell shall be issued or given to the heirs and devisees of the decedent, and others interested in the estate,[25] and it is by service or publication of the required citation or notice that jurisdiction of the persons of those interested is acquired.[26] The court cannot, at the hearing, abandon the case presented by the

[b] Notice to distributees.—(1) An application for a sale of personalty for the payment of debts need not be upon notice to the distributees. Smith v. Chew, 35 Miss. 153; Hutchins v. Brooks, 31 Miss. 430. (2) But when a sale is to be made for distribution, notice to the distributees is necessary and must be affirmatively shown by the record. Hutchins v. Brooks, 31 Miss. 430; Joslin v. Caughlin, 26 Miss. 134.

[c] Before minor beneficiaries can be divested of their title, it is necessary that the probate court acquire jurisdiction over their persons by service on their guardian, or the appointment of a guardian ad litem for them, if they have no guardian. Ball v. Clothier, 34 Wash. 299, 75 P 1099.

[d] Notice necessary, although not required by statute.—State v. Holtcamp, 245 Mo. 655, 151 SW 153.

[e] An application to mortgage or lease the land must be upon notice, the same as an application to sell. Martin v. Neal, 125 Ind. 547, 25 NE 813.

[f] Constructive notice.—An order for sale of real estate should not be set aside on the ground that the heirs had no knowledge of the filing of the petition for sale, where the estate had been long pending in court and the heirs had the constructive notice provided by statute. In re Leonis, 138 Cal. 194, 71 P 171.

[g] Time of issuing citation.—A statute requiring the citation, when issued upon the petition, to be served within sixty days thereafter, does not render the proceeding null for failure to issue the citation promptly on the filing of the petition. Matter of Van Vleck, 32 Misc. 419, 66 NYS 727, 1 Mills Surr. 606.

[h] Notice for second hearing.—After a reversal of an order granting a nonsuit and dismissing a petition for an order requiring the executrix to sell real estate, it is not necessary upon a second hearing again to give the statutory notice, but the court is at liberty to hear and dispose of the petition upon such notice as may be provided by its general rules or as it may deem reasonable in the particular case. In re Couts, 100 Cal. 400, 34 P 865.

[i] Second sale.—A probate court acquiring jurisdiction, refusing to approve an administrator's sale of real estate, may at a subsequent term order a sale without notice to the persons interested. Brown v. Marshall, 241 Mo. 707, 145 SW 810. See also Cahill v. Bassett, 66 Mich. 407, 33 NW 722 (where the court was equally divided as to whether a new notice was required for a new sale).

[j] Agreement for sale upon reasonable notice.—Where an agreement provided that a sale, which must be made in the course of administration, should be made upon reasonable notice, no legal requisites were dispensed with, and whatever was ordinarily essential to such a sale continued to be so. Halleck v. Moss, 17 Cal. 339.

[k] Order on annual settlement.—(1) An order for a sale of land may be made by the court without notice to the heirs on an annual settlement of the accounts of the executor or administrator, where it appears that the personal property is insufficient to pay the debts. Hutchinson v. Shelley, 133 Mo. 400, 34 SW 838; Day v. Graham, 97 Mo. 398, 11 SW 55; Teverbaugh v. Hawkins, 82 Mo. 180; Patee v. Mowry, 59 Mo. 161. (2) But otherwise notice is necessary. Hutchinson v. Shelley, 133 Mo. 400, 34 SW 838; Teverbaugh v. Hawkins, 82 Mo. 180.

[l] Land fraudulently conveyed.—Notice to the heirs is not necessary where the proceeding is to recover, and sell for the payment of debts, land fraudulently conveyed by decedent in his lifetime. Harrington v. Gage, 6 Vt. 532.

petition and order the sale for another object, as such sale would be without notice;[27] and so also, where after the rendition of a judgment of sale an amended petition was filed, reciting that the land had been incorrectly described in the petition and judgment, and setting out a correct description, and the descriptions were materially different, land embraced in the first being omitted from the second, and land not embraced in the first being included in the second, the making of an order amending the judgment of sale, and ordering a sale of the newly described land in accordance with the terms of the original judgment, without any summons ever issuing on the amended petition, or any report from the guardian or guardian ad litem of infant defendants ever being made thereon until after the sale was confirmed, was error.[28] But a notice by an administrator of an intention to apply for an order to sell lands for the payment of debts may be used by his successor as administrator of the same estate, in case the first administrator fails to effect a sale;[29] and it has been held that, where an executor files a petition in the proper court for license to sell real property, and the heirs and devisees sign a waiver of notice and enter an appearance, or are duly served with notice, such notice will continue until the debts mentioned in the petition are paid by the sale of the real property described therein, and a purchaser under a renewed license issued on such petition, who has paid the purchase price, such price being applied to the payment of the debts against the estate of the testator, and the sale having been confirmed and a deed made to such purchaser, may rely upon the title so acquired as against a collateral attack by the heirs and devisees of such testator.[30] Where, in an action to settle an estate and sell realty to pay debts, the administrator with will annexed joined in the prayer for the sale, process on his answer and cross petition was unnecessary.[31]

Want of notice as jurisdictional. As a general rule, a failure to give notice or to give proper notice is held to be jurisdictional and to render the order of sale and the sale thereunder nullities, at least as to the interest of persons not notified;[32] but in a few jurisdictions the courts, regarding the

It could, however, do this only upon evidence clearly establishing the untruthfulness of the record").

[a] Failure to give personal notice to resident heirs.—An order for an administrator's sale to pay debts is void if personal notice was not served on resident heirs as required by statute, notice merely by publication being insufficient. Jackson v. Johnson, 248 Mo. 680, 154 SW 759.

[b] An order for the mortgaging and leasing of land is void where made without notice, although notice was given of a previous application to sell. Baker v. Edwards, 156 Ind. 53, 59 NE 174; Martin v. Neal, 125 Ind. 547, 25 NE 813.

[c] Omission to give statutory notice cannot be cured.—Hutchinson v. Shelley, 133 Mo. 400, 34 SW 838 (by a subsequent notice); In re Mahoney, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 501.

[d] Service of notice upon infant heirs only, where the statute requires service on the guardians or persons having control of infants, is insufficient to confer jurisdiction. Whitney v. Porter, 23 Ill. 445.

[e] Effect of appointment of guardian ad litem.—Where there has been no service of summons on a minor defendant, the appointment of a guardian ad litem does not give the court jurisdiction of his person. Manternach v. Studt, 230 Ill. 356, 82 NE 829, 120 AmSR 310.

[f] A notice to the husband of a legatee of an application by the executors for an order to sell real estate is not sufficient, under the requirements for original notice (Code § 3514), to give the court jurisdiction to enter a decree denying his rights in his deceased wife's share under the will. Blain v. Dean, 160 Iowa 708, 142 NW 418.

[g] Title of purchaser valid except as against heir not notified.—Menefee v. Marge, (Va.) 4 SE 726.

[h] An omission to serve the notice on a tenant who occupied a portion of the premises did not affect the validity of the purchaser's title except as to the tenant, and as to him only during the continuance of proceeding to sell as being strictly in rem, look upon a failure to give notice as a mere irregularity which does not render the judgment void.[33]

[§ 1507] b. Persons Entitled to Notice. The heirs[34] and devisees[35] of decedent are the persons primarily entitled to notice. In some jurisdictions it is required that a notice, citation, summons, or order to show cause shall be served on infant heirs as well as adult, in order to obtain jurisdiction of their persons,[36] and the widow has also been held entitled to notice.[37] Under some statutes persons in occupation of premises of which a sale is desired are entitled to notice.[38] The executor or administrator must be cited on an application by a creditor for a sale of decedent's realty to pay debts.[39] Land charged with legacies may be sold for the payment of debts without service of the order to show cause upon the legatees.[40] Creditors of the decedent are not usually entitled to notice,[41] although this is sometimes required[42] where a notice to present claims has not been published,[43] nor are persons claiming adversely to, or under title derived his lease. Rigney v. Coles, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 479.

[i] Statute under which sale made must govern.—Where a sale appearing upon the record to have been made under the section of the statute providing for the payment of debts was void for want of the notice required by that section, it could not be sustained as having been made under other sections, which provided for a sale for other ends, and which required no notice. Valle v. Fleming, 19 Mo. 454, 61 AmD 566.

independently of, decedent.[44] It has also been held that mortgagees of the property are not entitled to notice.[45] A purchaser from the heir has been held not entitled to be served with notice of the petition to sell, where an examination of the record would have shown him that the property was subject to be sold for decedent's debts, that there were debts unpaid, and that an administrator had been appointed for the very purpose of subjecting the land to their payment.[46] But it has also been held that, in a proceeding by a creditor under the statute to dispose of a decedent's real estate for the payment of debts, citation must issue to one who has purchased the property at a sale in partition proceedings among the heirs.[47] Where plaintiff in an action against an heir attached certain real estate in which the heir had an interest, and thereafter plaintiff recovered judgment against the heir on his claim, it was held that he was a party interested in a proceeding by the administrator for the sale of the decedent's lands to pay debts, and was entitled to notice.[48]

[§ 1508] c. Form and Requisites. Where the statute does not declare what the notice shall contain, it is for the court to determine whether the statements thereof are sufficient,[49] but where the statute provides that notice shall be given in such form and manner as the court shall prescribe, no mere constructive notice will be sufficient, unless it is given in the form and manner prescribed by the court.[50] As a general rule where the notice gives information that at a specified time and place the executor or administrator will apply for authority to sell the whole of the real estate, or so much as is necessary for the purpose stated, this is sufficient for all practical purposes,[51] and in determining the sufficiency of a notice the courts should consider whether a reasonable person in the exercise of his ordinary faculties would on reading the notice be apprised by it in what court and at what time the petition would be presented.[52] It has been held not to be necessary that the citation or order to show cause should specifically name the heirs, devisees, or persons interested, but a general direction "to all persons interested" is sufficient,[53] and where the widow is the petitioner and the whole proceeding is at her instance, it is not necessary that her name should appear in the citation.[54] It has also been held that, where the parties named in the citation have been served, the omission of the Christian names of some of them and the failure to give the individual names of others of them composing business firms is not fatal, but the defect may be cured by amendment.[55] But on the other hand a published notice "to whom it may concern" has been held insufficient, the heirs being named in the petition.[56] The citation or notice need not specifically describe the property to be sold,[57] or specify the day in the term of court specified when the application will be made.[58] Where the statute requiring a minute book to be kept of probate proceedings does not require that an order made in open court shall be signed by the judge, the signature of the judge's name made by the clerk to an order to show cause why real estate should not be sold to pay debts written at length in the order book is surplusage, and the entry is sufficient evidence of the order.[59] Under a statute requiring citation to issue to heirs and devisees mentioned in a petition to sell realty for decedent's debts to appear at the term therein mentioned not less than ten days after service of citation to show cause against an order of sale, a citation directing appearance to be made on the day of which the publication of service is completed gives less than the required time for appearance, and is not sufficient.[60] Under a statute providing that the original notice must inform defendant of the nature of the cause to be heard and the relief demanded, a notice that the executors of a will will present a petition for leave to sell the real estate, directed to the husband of testator's daughter who had died after the will went into effect, is not sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to enter a decree denying the rights of the husband in his wife's share under the will.[61]

[§ 1509] d. Personal Service. It is often required that the summons, citation, notice, or order to show cause shall be personally served on those interested within the jurisdiction[62] a designated time before the hearing of the application,[63] but the legislature has power to dispense with personal notice to heirs and allow notice by publication merely,[64] even in cases where the heirs are residents of the county where the land is situated or the administration is pending.[65] Under some statutes it has been held optional with the representative whether notice shall be given by personal service or by publication, either mode sufficing,[66] and personal service has also been held to dispense with a statutory requirement of publication.[67] Where the service of a notice has been adjudged sufficient by the court to which it was returnable, the court will be presumed to have acquired jurisdiction thereby.[68] An admission of service may be sufficient,[69] except in the case of infants.[70]

[§ 1510] e. Publication. Publication of the notice of an application for a sale, or of the citation or summons thereon, or the order to show cause against the sale, is often provided for[71] in lieu of personal service,[72] and this is the usual mode of giving notice in the case of nonresident heirs or devisees.[73] An order of publication is usually necessary,[74] and such order is commonly based upon an affidavit showing the facts necessary to warrant the giving of notice in this manner.[75] The requirements of the statute or order of court under which

63. Summersett v. Summersett, 40 Ala. 596, 91 AmD 494; Pinckney v. Smith, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 524.

[a] Adjourned hearing.—An order to show cause was issued, returnable on April 26, but was not served on an infant heir. On the return day of the order a special guardian was appointed for the infant, who admitted service of the citation for the infant. The proof was then taken and the proceedings adjourned to May 10. On April 26 a copy of the order, returnable on that day, was taken, the return day was erased, and the new adjourned day inserted, and the order was then served upon the infant, but no new order to show cause was entered or made. It was held that the sale was invalid because the infant, when the proof was taken, had not been served with process and had no legal guardian, and the order served upon him was not in fact an order and was too late to be of service. 75. Rowand v. Carroll, 81 Ill. 224.

[a] Affidavit of nonresidence may be on information and belief.—Rowand v. Carroll, 81 Ill. 224.

[b] Caption.—An affidavit filed in a proceeding by an executor or administrator for an order to sell land to pay debts, to authorize the publication of notice, need not be entitled in the case. If it states the necessary facts and is filed in the case, even if not entitled at all, and without any caption, it may be sustained. Harris v. Lester, 80 Ill. 307.

[c] Where the statute is silent as to who shall make the affidavit to publication is made must be complied with[76] as to the length of time during which the publication shall be continued,[77] the time when publication shall begin and end,[78] the paper or papers in which the publication is to be made,[79] and the number of insertions.[80] A requirement that publication shall be made a certain number of weeks consecutively is satisfied by the publication of the prescribed number of times at weekly intervals before the hearing;[81] but the full notice prescribed must be given, that is to say, the first publication must be made the prescribed number of weeks prior to the hearing.[82] After the completion of the publication of the order to show cause for the time prescribed by statute, the court can proceed at once at the time named in the order,[83] and the fact that the publication of the notice is continued beyond the time when the application was to be made does not in any way affect the legality of the notice.[84] It has been held that compliance with the statutory requirements must be shown affirmatively by the representative or the person claiming title under the order of the court.[85]

[§ 1511] f. Posting. It is sometimes required by statute that notice of an application to sell realty shall be posted,[86] and a statute giving to the

[a] Publication for the time fixed by law is sufficient, although an interlocutory decree of the probate court required publication for a greater length of time. Sellers v. Talby, 33 Miss. 582.

[b] Validity of order.—Under a statute directing that publication shall be for not less than four weeks, or for such further time as court may direct, an order directing publication of citation for not less than ten weeks is valid, although the dates for publication allow only eight weeks. Finley v. Morrison, 87 Or. 160, 169 P 781.

[c] Where publication was not for the required time (1) the sale is void. Norton v. Reed, 253 Mo. 236, 161 SW 842 [foll Young v. Downey, 145 Mo. 250, 46 SW 1086, 68 AmSR 568 (overr Cruzen v. 78. Sheldon v. Wright, 5 N. Y. 497; Zech's Est., 15 Pa. Co. 622.

[a] Construction of statutes.—(1) A statute requiring notice to be published four weeks in some newspaper before the term of court, does not require the publication for the four weeks immediately preceding the term of court. Robbins v. Boulware, 190 Mo. 33, 88 SW 674, 109 AmSR 746. (2) Under a statute requiring the rule to show cause to be published "for six weeks successively once in each week before the return-day," it is not necessary that the publication should be made in the six weeks next preceding the return day. Robinson v. Furman, 47 N. J. Eq. 307, 20 A 898.

[b] Lapse of time between last publication and return day.—Proceedings will not be dismissed on the ground that eight full days did not elapse between the date of the last publication and the date when the citation was made returnable. Matter of Denton, 40 Misc. 326, 81 NYS 1031 [aff 86 App. Div. 359, 83 NYS 778].

79. Townsend v. Tallant, 33 Cal. 45, 91 AmD 617; Stow v. Kimball, 28 Ill. 93.

[a] Nearest newspaper. — Any newspaper printed at the county seat answers the intention of a statute requiring a notice of the sale of estate and property to be published in the nearest newspaper. Stow v. Kimball, 28 Ill. 93.

[b] Direction of court or judge.—Publication may be made in such newspaper in the county as the court or judge shall direct, for the number of successive weeks required by the statute, although such paper is published weekly only, and other papers are published daily in the same county. In re O'Sullivan, 84 Cal. 444, 24 P 281.

[c] Petition to sell land outside of county where administration pending.—Where an estate was being administered in D county and a petition of the administrator asked for leave to sell lands situated in R county, together with lands situated in D county, it was unnecessary that the notice of the petition to sell should be given in a newspaper published in R county. Gavin v. Grayvon, 41 Ind. 559.

[d] Failure to designate paper in order.—A publication of a notice for the required time in one newspaper of the county is sufficient as against collateral attack, although the court, in the order, designated no newspaper, especially where the court accepted the publication as a compliance with its order. Blickensderffer v. Hanna, 231 Mo. 93, 132 SW 678.

80. Townsend v. Tallant, 33 Cal. 45, 91 AmD 617.

[a] The discontinuance of the paper at the end of three weeks does not dispense with the necessity of further publication where notice of an administrator's petition to sell land has been ordered to be published "four successive weeks" in a certain paper, except in the event of personal service or written assent to the sale by all persons interested in the estate. Townsend v. Tallant, 33 Cal. 45, 91 AmD 617.

81. Madden v. Cooper, 47 Ill. 359; Dayton v. Mintzer, 22 Minn. 393; Matter of Reed, 171 App. Div. 21, 156 NYS 944 [rev on other grounds 218 N. Y. 711 mem, 113 NE 254].

[a] Publication once a week in daily paper.—A statute requiring that notice of an order to show cause why leave to sell shall not be granted to an administrator shall be published for four weeks in a newspaper printed in the county is complied with by a publication once a week for four successive weeks, although the newspaper in which publication is made is published daily. Rigney v. Coles, 19 N. Y. Super. 479.

82. Madden v. Cooper, 47 Ill. 359; Gibson v. Roll, 30 Ill. 172, 83 AmD 181; Monahon v. Vandyke, 27 Ill. 154; Young v. Downey, 145 Mo. 250, 46 SW 1086, 150 Mo. 317, 51 SW 751 [overr Cruzer v. Stephens, 123 Mo. 337, 27 SW 557, 45 AmSR 549].

[a] Lapse of prescribed time before hearing sufficient. — Under a statute requiring the first publication to be six weeks before the day the petition should be presented, it is not necessary that six weeks should intervene between the first day of publication of notice and the first day of the term in which the application is made, but only that six weeks should intervene between the first day of publication and the day upon which an application is made for an order to sell. Madden v. Cooper, 47 Ill. 359.

[b] Delay in presenting petition.—If notice of an application to sell lands is not published for six full weeks before the day therein specified as the time when the petition will be presented, parties are not bound to take notice of such application; and although the petition is not in fact presented until a later day than the one fixed by the notice, nor until after the six weeks required by the statute has expired, yet that fact will not cure the defect. Gibson v. Roll, 30 Ill. 172, 83 AmD 181.

[c] On the other hand it has been held that an order of notice of the hearing by the probate court of an administrator's petition to sell land requiring the notice to be published in a designated weekly paper "two consecutive weeks," although the hearing was to be had eleven days after the order was made, should be construed to mean "two consecutive times," that is to say, in the next two issues, the court laying stress upon the fact that the order did not require the notice to be published "for" two consecutive weeks. Fleming v. Bale, 23 Kan. 88. To like effect Stadelman v. Miner, 83 Or. 348, 155 P 708, 163 P 585, 983.

83. In re Roach, 139 Cal. 17, 72 P 393 (it is not necessary that thirty days should elapse after the completed publication before the court has jurisdiction of the persons interested in the estate, even though some of such persons reside in Ireland).

[a] An affidavit of publication made by the "proprietor" of the paper in which the order was published is sufficient. Reynolds v. Schmidt, 20 Wis. 374.

[b] Evidence independent of record.—It is proper, as against a collateral attack, to show by competent evidence, independently of the record, that the publication was in fact made in strict accordance with the requirements of the order of the court. Schroeder v. Wilcox, 39 Nebr. 136, 57 NW 1031.

court or judge power to direct what notice shall be given may authorize a direction for notice by posting with respect to an interested party whose residence is unknown.[87]

[§ 1512] g. Return.[88] The full notice required by statute must be given, and if the citation or summons is made returnable in a less time than that required by statute, there is want of jurisdiction which is fatal to the validity of the proceedings;[89] but the fact that the order to show cause was made returnable one day later than the time prescribed by statute has been held to be a mere irregularity which will not avoid the sale.[90] A summons to heirs, directing them to appear on a past day and show cause why realty should not be sold for the payment of debts, confers no jurisdiction.[91] The application to sell real estate must be made at the term or date specified in the notice published or the order to show cause; otherwise the order will not be binding for want of notice.[92]

[§ 1513] h. Waiver and Curing of Errors. Errors or irregularities in the notice may be cured by the appearance of those interested,[93] or by the confirmation of the sale,[94] and even an omission to issue summons or give notice may be waived.[95] So also heirs who, with knowledge of defects in the service of the citation in a proceeding by the administrator to sell land to pay debts, accept their distributive shares of the proceeds of the sale, are estopped to question its validity.[96] But it has been held that, under a statute requiring notice of an application by administrators for an order authorizing the sale of lands to be publicly given, appearance in such a proceeding does not waive a failure to give notice.[97] Where an order to show cause is properly published, a failure, in issuing the order, to designate the paper in which the publication shall be made, as required by statute, is cured by the order of court confirming the sale.[98] Under some statutes adults may waive the notice by filing their assent to the sale in writing,[99] and guardians may assent in like manner for their wards,[1] but it has been held that infant heirs cannot personally come into court and waive citation and consent to the decree.[2]

[§ 1514] i. Presumptions; Collateral Attack. According to the weight of authority it is to be presumed that there was such service or appearance as conferred upon the court, in which the proceedings were brought, jurisdiction of the persons of those interested,[3] where the record is silent

[a] Propriety of service by publication.—Where the statute authorizes publication only when the heirs or devisees are nonresidents, and requires personal service of resident heirs or devisees, it will be presumed, where notice was given by publication only and the residence of heirs or devisees does not appear, that they were nonresidents. Desloge v. Tucker, 196 Mo. 587, 94 SW 283.

[b] Absence of notice from files.—Where it appears expressly that notice was given by publication and posting of the pendency of the proceeding, the absence from the files of the notice will not defeat the presumption that it was the proper notice. Clark v. Hillis, 134 Ind. 421, 34 NE 13.

[c] Presence of heir at residence.—Where a warning order was made against one of the heirs, who was a nonresident, three days after the affidavit of nonresidence was filed, there was no presumption, in the absence of some showing to the contrary, that such person, who was a resident of Chicago, was there on the day the affidavit was filed, and in the state on the day the warning order was issued, so as to render it bad for delay, but the presumption would be that he was at his place of resion the subject of notice[4] or does not affirmatively state facts negativing the conclusion that notice was given,[5] and the regularity of the notice cannot be collaterally questioned.[6] But in some jurisdictions it is held that the giving of the notice required must affirmatively appear by the record in order to sustain the jurisdiction of the court.[7] Recitals in a decree for the sale of land as to service of process and proof of publication are prima facie true,[8] although in a proceeding to vacate the decree they are not conclusive, but may be contradicted.[9] In a collateral proceeding, however, it is sufficient that the decree recites that due notice was given; such a finding is conclusive and can be rebutted only by evidence in the record and not by extraneous proof,[10] and the judgment of the court that the notice was sufficient is binding on all parties interested, unless an appeal is taken.[11] But if the record shows service which is insufficient and fails to show that the court found that it had jurisdiction, the presumption is rebutted and it must be held that the court acted upon insufficient notice.[12]

[§ 1515] 9. Objections and Exceptions. An application for a sale of real property of a decedent may be opposed by persons who are interested in the land, such as the heirs and devisees,[13] or by the personal representative, where a sale to pay debts is sought by a creditor,[14] but not by persons who have no interest such as will be affected by a sale.[15] Either the heirs or devisees,[16] or the personal representative[17] may become estopped to oppose or object to a sale of the land.

Manner and time of objection. The mode of objection, whether more or less formal, depends upon local statute or procedure.[18] Failure to comply with a statute requiring an application by administrators for leave to sell land for payment of debts to show the estimated expenses of the administration and give a list of all the property on hand liable for the payment of debts, etc., can be taken advantage of only by exceptions made at the proper time.[19]

Nature of objection. Any objections or exceptions which legitimately tend to oppose the conclusion that a sale should be made may be raised and considered.[20] Thus it may be set up in opposition that the sale has not been asked within the time limited by statute for the procurement of a sale,[21] or the heirs may contest the exhaustion of the estate who might contest an application for the sale of lands to pay debts, although at the time of the purchase such property had not been set apart to the widow as a homestead. Newell v. Johns, 128 Ala. 584, 29 S 609.

[c] The attorney for absent heirs need not formally oppose the curator's application for a sale. It is sufficient if, when notified of the petition, he indorses on it his approval. Michel v. Michel, 11 La. 149.

[a] Creditors.—Although creditors may be made parties, it is only for the purpose of presenting and proving their debts and contesting other claims, and they cannot be allowed to interpose an answer or file objections for the purpose of contesting the necessity of the proceedings or of making a defense to them. Matter of Campbell, 66 App. Div. 478, 73 NYS 290 [aff 170 N. Y. 84, 62 NE 1070]. Compare Jackson v. Warthen, 111 Ga. 834, 36 SE 214 (where a caveat filed by a creditor was considered).

[b] A person claiming paramount title to a decedent's real estate has no right to appear in proceedings brought by the administrator and resist an order for sale of the property to pay decedent's debts, since such proceeding cannot affect claimant's interest. Shields v. Ashley, 16 Mo. 471.

Simmons v. Defoe, 138 Ga. 534, 75 SE 626.

[a] An heir who was administrator of the estate for several years and was responsible to a considerable extent for the failure to sell lands to pay debts cannot object to an application to sell for that purpose by the administrator de bonis non on the ground that there has been unreasonable delay. Black v. Robinson, 70 Ark. 185, 68 SW 489.

[b] Contract of infant heir.—A contract between an infant heir at law and a creditor of decedent's estate, by which the former conveys by deed of trust a tract of land in payment of the debt, taking the creditor's receipt, and specifying therein that the contract is subject to ratification by the infant on attaining his majority, being disaffirmed by him after attaining his majority, does not estop him from setting up the statute of limitations in defense to an application by the creditor, as administrator of the estate, for an order to sell the lands for the payment of the debt. Warren v. Hearne, 82 Ala. 554, 2 S 491.

[c] Objection by devisees who signed petition.—Where the devisees who signed the petition for an order to mortgage the real estate present, promptly after the order is granted, a petition asking for a revocation of the order, setting forth that they signed the first petition under a misapprehension and misunderstanding of their rights, they will not be precluded from obtaining redress if they have any bona fide rights in the premises. Pa.—Steffy's App., 76 Pa. 94.

[a] Answer. — Although an answer to a petition in equity for the sale of personal property to pay a judgment against a decedent's estate is objectionable in so far as it applies for affirmative relief, it may nevertheless be available as an answer to the bill. Howell v. Randle, 171 Ala. 451, 54 S 563.

[b] Oral answer.—A rule to show cause should not issue on a mere answer ore tenus to a petition by executors for authority to sell real estate to pay debts, since the proceedings of the orphans' court should have the substance of equitable form, by petition, answer, and replication, in which the requisites making the case should appear. Steffy's App., 76 Pa. 94.

[c] No formal answer is requisite, but objections and exceptions are sufficient if made in such form that the court is enabled to inquire into their sufficiency or correctness. Paine v. Pendleton, 32 Miss. 320.

[d] Written exceptions.—The objection that a claim against a decedent is barred by limitations, as a ground for refusing to order a sale of land to pay debts, must be made in the circuit court by written exceptions, and, on such exceptions being filed, the claimant must be allowed a reasonable time to take proof, if he so desires. Spradlin v. Stanley, 124 Ky. 701, 99 SW 965, 30 KyL 928.

[e] Motions.—Neither a motion at the opening of the trial to dismiss a petition by a creditor for the sale of decedent's real estate to pay debts, on the ground that it appeared that limitations had run, nor a motion after the trial that it was affirmatively shown that limitations had run against the claim, raised the question of the sufficiency of the petition to establish the existence of a debt. In re Pirie, 198 N. Y. 209, 91 NE 587, 19 AnnCas 672 [aff 133 App. Div. 431, 117 NYS 753, and rearg den 199 N. Y. 524 mem, 91 NE 1144 mem].

[f] If a needless or illegal purpose for sale is added to a proper one, objection should be, not by demurrer, but by motion to strike out the objectionable portion. Conger v. Cook, 56 Iowa 117, 8 NW 782.

[g] An objection as to the right of creditors to bring an action to determine whether there had been a devastavit, and to subject the real estate to the payment of their debts, can be taken advantage of only by demurrer, as the alleged want of authority appears on the face of the proceedings. Wilson v. Pearson, 102 N. C. 290, 9 SE 707.

[a] Denial of necessity.—Where an administrator applies for leave to sell the lands for the necessary purposes of paying debts and for distribution, it is error to strike on demurrer a ground of caveat filed by the heirs at law, denying that any necessity for the sale exists, although it appears that there are debts due by the estate. Finch v. Du Bignon, 117 Ga. 113, 43 SE 423.

[b] Postponement of sale.—A sale of real estate may be postponed by the court when the life tenant objects to the sale, and where creditors express a willingness to wait, pending arrangements looking toward a mortgage of the same, it being alleged that a present sale would result in a probable sacrifice of the property. Woolman's Est., 6 Pa. Dist. 205, 19 Pa. Co. 281.

the personalty,[22] or seek a proper application of personalty which the administrator wrongfully refuses to inventory.[23] A denial of the existence, justness, or validity of the debts for the payment of which a sale is asked is also a good ground for objection.[24] But only such objections or exceptions are admissible by way of opposing the sale as meet fairly the issue whether a sale should be ordered, without interposing collateral issues which are immaterial to the question whether a sale should be ordered or should be determined in different proceedings.[25] Where land was mortgaged in several parcels to different persons, the mortgagee of one parcel has a right upon application by the administrators for an order authorizing the sale of all the land for the payment of debts to require that the sale of lands other than that covered by his mortgage should be properly and regularly ordered.[26]

Practice on overruling demurrer. Where, in a special proceeding to make real estate assets instituted before a superior court clerk in North Carolina, there was a demurrer filed to the complaint, it was error for the judge, after overruling the demurrer, to direct that an order issue to plaintiff to sell the land, but the decision of the judge should be transmitted to the clerk with leave for defendant to answer before the clerk if so advised.[27]

[§ 1516] 10. Interference of Other Proceedings Involving Land. A suspension of proceedings for a sale by the probate court while other litigation

[a] Sufficiency of answer.—An answer pleading that "no cause of action to have the lands sold had accrued within the period of fifteen years next preceding the filing of the petition," was good under a statute requiring such petition to be filed within fifteen years, but an answer that "the cause of action mentioned in the petition did not occur within six years" was bad, as not showing whether the cause of action was one to which the six year limitation applied. Cole v. Lafontaine, 84 Ind. 446.

[b] New trial for failure to consider plea.—Where heirs, in their answer to a proceeding by an administrator to obtain a license to sell land for the payment of debts, plead that the action was not brought within the time prescribed by law, and the court below fails to consider the merits of the plea, and there is some evidence to sustain it, a new trial will be granted. Howell v. Randle, 171 Ala. 451, 54 S 563.

[b] General allegations of fraud.—Where a petition was filed by an administrator to sell land to satisfy a judgment against him, an answer by the heirs which alleged merely in general terms that there had been fraud and collusion without stating the facts constituting fraud was insufficient to present any issue. Best v. Best, 161 N. C. 513, 77 SE 762.

[c] The heir must prove that the debts do not exist in order to prevent a sale for the payment of debts. A mere allegation to that effect is insufficient. Lehman v. Worley, 40 La. Ann. 620, 4 S 573.

Brown v. Powell, 45 Ala. 149. (2) An objection that, on account of the depreciated value of testator's property, a sale thereof would be to the damage of the residuary legatees cannot be interposed against a petition for an order directing the executrix to sell, as the objection can be considered only when the sale comes up for confirmation. [b] Depression of market.—It is not a good ground of objection to an application by an administrator for leave to sell lands or stock in an incorporated company for the purpose of paying debts that the market is depressed, and that for this reason the property will not sell for its full value. is in progress may sometimes be proper;[28] but ordinarily a sale may be ordered and made for the payment of debts notwithstanding the pendency of proceedings for partition[29] or to foreclose a mortgage,[30] the proceedings of a family meeting,[31] or a previous levy of execution on the land.[32]

[§ 1517] 11. Evidence. The burden of proof as to the necessity for a sale rests upon the personal representative when the application is made by him,[33] and he must show such necessity regardless of whether or not there is a contest over the application.[34] It is also incumbent upon him to show that the land sought to be sold is such an asset of the estate that it may be sold.[35] Where the application is made by a creditor, the burden of proof rests upon him.[36] Since a family allowance is a charge against the estate, where a petition for a sale of real estate to pay debts assumed to state the full amount of all such charges, it should be presumed either that there was no family allowance, or, if made, that it was included in the charges enumerated.[37] Under a statute providing that in applications to the probate court for the sale of land the deed shall be sufficient evidence of title to authorize the court to proceed and hear the application, in a proceeding in the probate court for the sale of land, it was error to exclude as evidence a deed showing title in the intestate to an undivided half interest in the land at the time of his death.[38]

[§ 1518] 12. Hearing and Determination in General.[39] As a general rule, before an order for the sale of property is made, there should be a hearing on the application therefor,[40] although there is to be found statutory authority for the practice of granting the order of sale ex parte, leaving persons interested in the estate, who question the necessity for a sale, to petition for a revocation of the license to sell, on which petition a hearing is had.[41] On the hearing of a petition for the sale of land to pay debts, the court should hear proof of the allegations of the petition and make inquiry as to the necessity of the sale,[42] and also, it has been held, as to the proper manner, terms, and con-

[e] Agreed statement of facts.—When a petition to the orphans' court for the sale of land for the payment of legacies alleges matters of fact as to which the court should have been informed and the matters are in the knowledge of the parties, the court, to avoid expense, may permit the parties to embody them in an agreement and file it; otherwise the court will appoint an auditor. [h] Consideration of cross complaint.—The circuit court may, in connection with application of an administrator to sell property to pay debts, consider a cross complaint showing reason why the interest of one heir should be sold first, and may mold its order accordingly. Galvin v. Britton, 151 Ind. 1, 49 NE 1064.

[i] Insolvent estate.—In New Jersey it has been held that, when an application is made to an orphans' court for an order to sell lands for the payment of debts on the ground that the personal estate is insufficient, under the statute applicable to such cases, and upon the return of the rule to show cause issued thereon, it appears that the personal and real estate are, and are known to the administrator to be, together insufficient to satisfy the debts claimed, the orphans' court may decline to make the order of sale because the application should have been made under the provisions of the statute relating to insolvent estates, especially where the proofs justify an inference that the administrator acted in bad faith in making the application. In re Godfrey, 72 N. J. Eq. 351, 354, 65 A 202 ("The election by the administrator to proceed under section 82 et seq., rather than under section 99 et seq., was matter of serious importance to the heir-at-law acquiring title to the lands by descent").

ditions of sale;[43] but matters purely collateral to the petition for sale should not be heard or passed upon,[44] nor need the court, on application by an administrator to sell real estate to pay debts, inquire whether the land to be sold is a homestead before issuing the order for the sale.[45] The court has jurisdiction to settle an account between the devisees and the legatees before ordering a sale for the payment of an unpaid legacy,[46] and it has been held error to decree the renting or selling of land before taking an account of the liens thereon and settling the priorities of creditors.[47] When debts are charged on settled real estate, the court, in determining whether the debts are to be raised by sale or mortgage, will give greater weight to the wishes of the persons whose interests in the estate are immediate than to those whose interests are more remote.[48] It has been held that, where the representative has petitioned for an order to sell real estate to pay debts, an order directing him to mortgage such real estate is invalid.[49]

Trial by court or jury; reference. The court has jurisdiction to try any question of fact properly arising in a proceeding to sell realty,[50] and while it may in some jurisdictions afford the parties a trial by jury when the nature of the issues entitles them to a jury trial or renders it appropriate,[51] issues of law are to be decided by the court.[52] It is usually a matter of discretion with the court either to investigate the facts or to order a reference,[53] but a reference should not be had where it would be a mere form and involve useless expense.[54]

Time of hearing. The hearing may be had and an order of sale made at a special term appointed for that purpose when such special terms are authorized by statute,[55] and under some statutes the chancellor may decree a sale at chambers where the necessity of the sale is not denied.[56] After the presentation of the petition the court may fix a subsequent date for the hearing of proofs or other action in the case,[57] and it has been held that, where the cause is not disposed of at one term, it stands continued as of course to the next term, and it is not necessary that an order of continuance should be entered.[58]

Findings. The findings or conclusions of law must be consistent with the findings of fact.[59] A finding that the character of the property is such that it cannot be beneficially partitioned among the heirs and distributees, and that it is for their best interests that the same be sold and the proceeds divided, is conclusive, unless it is inconsistent with facts specially set forth.[60] A finding that the allegations of the petition are true, and that the lands are liable as assets for the payment of debts of the estate, cannot be construed as a finding that the lands are liable for the payment of purchase money.[61]

[§ 1519] 13. Proof and Contest of Claims—a. In General. Where a sale is asked for the payment of debts, it must be shown that there are existing debts against the estate for the payment of which the sale is necessary,[62] especially where the insufficiency of the personalty is denied.[63] Under some statutes the surrogate or probate court has jurisdiction, in a proceeding to sell land, instituted by the representative, to adjudicate upon the validity of claims against the estate,[64] and disputes and controversies in regard to claims ought generally to be settled before a license to sell is granted.[65]

Where the undisputed claims exceed the value of the personal estate, an error in ruling as to the validity of another debt is harmless, in the absence of any objection to selling all the lands when part would be enough.[66]

Diehl, 79 Ill. 473. But compare Grayson v. Weddle, 63 Mo. 523 (where, by inadvertence, the debt shown by a mortgage note had not, at the date of an order made by the probate court for the sale of the mortgaged property, been allowed, but it was allowed before the sale, the want of allowance before making the order was a mere irregularity which would not affect the title of a purchaser at the sale).

[c] Allowance by a circuit court to an executor and his attorney on the executor's resignation are reviewable in a proceeding by the administrator de bonis non to sell real estate to pay debts, especially when minor heirs and purchasers from other heirs are parties, and their lands are to be subjected to sale to pay such allowances. [d] Effect of failure to answer.—Where, in a case of sale of real estate to pay debts, the court ordered the petition of a claimant to be set down for hearing on a future day fixed, a copy having been first served on the parties in interest, and no answer to the petition was filed, and it was sent to an auditor to state the claim, the statements in the petition were not therefore to be taken pro confesso, but a trial on the merits might be had. [c] Claims against two estates.—A petition was filed in the probate court by the administratrix of T to sell the real estate in aid of personal assets. On the death of the wife of T the petition was amended to show that fact, and an answer to the petition was filed by the administrator of the estate of the wife alleging that his intestate left only a small personal estate, that a claim for funeral expenses had been allowed, and that a claim of the administratrix of T against the estate had not been allowed, and asking the court for such relief as seemed proper. It was held that the answer would be construed as in legal effect a petition to sell the interests of his intestate, in aid of the personal assets of her estate, especially where this construction was placed upon it by the parties themselves in the probate court. Hence the probate court had jurisdiction to determine the claims against both estates. Gaston v. Gaston, 80 S. C. 157, 61 SE 393.

[a] Reopening case.—Where the evidence in support of a claim litigated by the devisees has been closed and the case submitted for decision, the surrogate has no power to reopen the case and receive new testimony without notice to the devisees or their attorney. In re Hearman, 11 NYS 905, 20 NYCivProc 8.

been held entitled to set up the statute of limitations, although the devisee himself did not appear.[68] It has also been held that the representative may in such proceedings contest claims,[69] and even a person to whom decedent conveyed land in fraud of creditors has been allowed to plead the statute of limitations in proceedings by the administrator to sell the land conveyed to pay outlawed debts.[70] But such claims cannot be contested by a person who would in no instance be affected by a determination as to their validity.[71]

[§ 1521] c. Defenses. The heirs or devisees may contest the validity and legality of any debts,[72] and may make any defense against the supposed debts which decedent could have made if living, or which the personal representative could make if the creditors were suing him at law.[73] Any fact which will show the nonexistence or extinguishment of debts is available as a defense,[74] and hence the heirs, devisees, or other persons entitled to contest claims may plead the statutes of nonclaim[75] or limitations[76] against any of the debts set up.

[§ 1522] d. Reference and Report. A reference and report as to the existence of debts is not necessary where allegations of the answer that all debts have been paid are not denied,[77] or where the pleadings allege, without contradiction, that decedent's debts are greater than the value of his estate and the rights of infants are not involved.[78] The report of a commissioner that in his judgment certain claims have been proved according to law is not sufficient to support a judgment directing a sale of decedent's real estate, to satisfy it, but, before any such sale is ordered, the validity of the claims should be passed upon by the court.[79]

[§ 1523] e. Effect of Allowance or Rejection of Claim. The real parties to the controversy in a proceeding to sell land for the payment of debts, whether instituted by the representative or by creditors, are the creditors on the one hand and the heirs or devisees on the other,[80] and the representative's admission of a claim against the estate does not bind the heirs or devisees.[81] Neither does the fact that a claim against the estate has been presented and allowed preclude the heir from contesting such claim,[82] but whether or not a claim has been allowed by the representative, it is treated the same and must be proved and established before the surrogate by common-law proof.[83] An allowance of the claim does, however, establish prima facie the existence of the debt,[84] and its due presentment.[85] The adjudication, on an application to sell real estate to pay debts of claims which were probated on the adjustment day, is conclusive on a subsequent similar application.[86] The fact that a claim has been rejected by the representative does not deprive the surrogate of jurisdiction to determine its validity.[87]

[§ 1524] f. Effect of Judgment against Representative. A judgment against the representative conclusively establishes the indebtedness on which it was based, as against him[88] and also against heirs or devisees who were parties to the proceeding in which it was rendered.[89] But it does not preclude heirs or devisees who were not parties or privies to the proceeding in which it was rendered from contesting the claim on which it was based,[90] although it is, even as against them, prima facie evidence of the validity and amount of the claim.[91]

[§ 1525] g. Evidence. In an application by the representative to sell land for the payment of debts, the burden of proving the insufficiency of personal assets and the existence of debts chargeable upon the lands rests upon the personal representative,[92] and the heirs, by setting up the statute of nonclaim, do not assume the burden of proving that defense, but the representative is regarded as holding the affirmative of the issue, and to maintain it is bound to prove the due filing or presentment of the claim.[93] The general rules of evidence[94] are to be applied in determining the admissibility of the evidence adduced to prove or disprove the existence of debts,[95] and the weight and sufficiency of the evidence which has been admitted.[96] It is not necessary that the existence of debts should be proved by disinterested witnesses,[97] but the creditors themselves may testify thereto.[98] Neither is a finding of indebtedness by commissioners necessary, as the existence of debts may be proved by other evidence.[99] It is not necessary that depositions be used to prove debts but they may be proved by evidence adduced in the ordinary mode.[1] A judgment rendered against decedent in his lifetime is conclusive evidence of the existence of a liability at the time, not only against the personal representative, but also against the heirs.[2] Admissions cannot be evidence of indebtedness where the persons by whom they were made had no power to bind those against whom they are sought to be used.[3] It is sufficient for an executrix, seeking to sell property of the estate, to swear to an account presented to her, showing debts and the necessity to sell property, and she need not appear in court and be cross-examined with reference thereto.[4]

[§ 1526] 14. Determination as to Sufficiency of Personalty—a. In General. Leave to sell land for the payment of a decedent's debts ought not to be granted without proof that the personalty is insufficient to meet the lawful claims upon the estate,[5] and a determination of the extent of the deficiency of personalty,[6] even though the application for a sale is not resisted by the heirs or devisees.[7] It has been considered that it should also appear upon an application by the executor or administrator that he has proceeded with due and reasonable diligence in pursuing the personal assets and converting and applying them to the purposes of administration.[8]

[§ 1527] b. Inventory, Appraisal, or Account. While it is sometimes required by statute that an inventory and appraisement of the personal estate be exhibited to the court on an application for a sale of realty to pay debts,[9] and it has been held error to decree a sale for this purpose until the administration accounts have been settled and the amounts and priorities of all debts ascertained,[10] the more general rule is that the filing of an inventory, appraisal, schedule, or account is not usually essential to the jurisdiction of the court to order a sale of realty for the payment of debts where it otherwise appears that the personal assets are insufficient.[11] So also, where it appeared that the personal property was insufficient to pay debts, it was held no objection to an order for the sale of real estate for that purpose that an appeal from the executrix's account was pending and remained undetermined.[12] Allowances by a circuit court to an executor and his attorney on the executor's resignation are reviewable in a proceeding by the administrator de bonis non to sell real estate to pay debts, especially when minor heirs and purchasers from other heirs are parties, and their lands are to be subjected to sale to pay such allowances.[13]

Where land is to be sold for division of the proceeds, an appraisal of the land is not necessary.[14]

[§ 1528] c. Evidence. The burden of proof rests upon the representative, when the application for a sale of realty to pay debts is made by him, to show that the personalty is actually insufficient

[a] Where it is admitted (1) by objections to an administrator's petition that the only property of the estate in the state is the realty, the objectors cannot on appeal complain that it was not proved that the personal property had been exhausted. In re Smith, 43 Or. 595, 73 P 336, 75 P 133. (2) The real property may be sold where the pleadings allege, without contradiction, that decedent's debts are greater than the value of the estate, although there has been no reference to a commissioner, or report of the necessity of sale, since, where the rights of infants are not involved, a reference and report are not essential to the validity of the sale. Union Trust, etc., Co. v. Marshall, 130 Ky. 206, 113 SW 73; Pierce v. Marrs, 153 Ky. 748, 156 SW 404.

[b] Proof that there is personalty available for payment of debts should be received. Cavitt v. Beall Hardware, etc., Co., (Tex. Civ. A.) 204 SW 798.

[c] Insufficiency of personalty must be determined by referee.—Matter of Van Vleck, 32 Misc. 419, 66 NYS 727, 1 Mills Surr. 606.

[d] A report of the clerk or master (1) that the personalty is insufficient is necessary. Reid v. Huff, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 345; Frazier v. Pankey, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 75. (2) Such report must be confirmed before the sale is ordered. Frazier v. Pankey, supra (a report made and confirmed after the sale will not validate it). (3) A settlement made by the representative with the clerk of the county court is prima facie evidence in his favor, and when accurate and not excepted to may constitute the basis of a master's report so as to authorize the chancellor to direct the sale of slaves to pay the debts of the estate. Curd v. Bonner, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 632. (4) A report of the assets of the estate drawn by the clerk without the submission of testimony, but by adopting an exhibit to an unsworn bill, purporting to lump the amount of the assets and the debts, and containing no particulars as to the value of the assets or as to the names of the creditors and the value of their respective claims, is not such a report as will authorize a decree for the sale of the property of the estate to pay the debts. Wade v. Fisher, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 490.

[e] The filing of a list of the debts, for the payment of which succession property is to be ordered sold, is required only in case the order for the sale is to be made by the clerk or his chief deputy, and not by the judge himself. Thibodaux v. Barrow, 129 La. 395, 56 S 339.

[f] A proceeding to sell land will not be deferred until the disposal of a pending proceeding against an heir alleging that he had personal property belonging to estate, where heir answered that he had no personal assets belonging to estate. Howe v. Brown, 287 Ill. 532, 123 NE 46.

[a] Foreclosure of mortgage.—Where, after the death of the grantor, it is necessary to invoke equity jurisdiction to foreclose a mortgage on specific real estate, the court should require the personal estate in the hands of the administrator to be first ascertained and determine how much of it is applicable to the mortgage debt and should require it to be so applied before a decree of sale of the land in satisfaction thereof. Miller v. Mitchell, 58 W. Va. 431, 52 SE 478.

[a] The court should ascertain and decide whether the personal estate which came to the hands of the applicant has been applied to the payment of debts. Bray v. Neill, 21 N. J. Eq. 343.

[b] On an application by an administrator de bonis non for leave to sell land for the payment of debts, he must show that his predecessor showed the same diligence as would have been required of him had he been appointed administrator in the first instance. Matter of Kingsland, 60 Hun 116, 14 NYS 495, 20 NYCiv Proc 357 [rev 9 NYS 447, 18 NYCiv Proc 115, 2 Conn. Surr. 187].

[b] Amendment.—(1) Where the schedule and appraisement is imperfect and insufficient, it may be amended. Walker's App., 1 Grant (Pa.) 431. (2) This may be done even after the sale. Kennedy v. Wachsmuth, 12 Serg. & R. 171, 14 AmD 676.

"The omission to present to the surrogate an account of the personal estate and of the debts of the intestate, was a fatal defect in the proceedings." Ford v. Walsworth, supra.

[a] Death of debtor pending suit.—Where, pending a suit to subject land to a judgment, the debtor dies and his heirs are made parties, the suit becomes one to sell the land of the heirs for the debt of decedent, and, before a sale is decreed, the accounts of the administrator must be settled, and any unadministered assets administered in relief of the realty. "It is urged that the administrator de bonis non did not file a just and true account. Having shown that the personal estate was exhausted, this was excused." Turner v. Fell, supra.

[a] Omission does not render sale void.—Although an administrator's account of the personal estate and debts is required by statute to be exhibited on oath before a citation to show cause why an administrator's sale of land to pay debts shall not be made, its omission does not render a decree of sale void. Learned v. Matthews, 40 Miss. 210.

[b] A creditor desiring a sale of real estate under order of a probate court is not obliged to exhibit a list of debts and inventory of the effects of the estate. That duty devolves on the administrator. Grayson v. Weddle, 63 Mo. 523.

to pay the debts.[15] Where the county court was without power to order real estate sold disencumbered of mortgages, the presumption on a subsequent application for sale of real estate is that, at the prior sale, only the interest of the decedent in the property was sold, so that the administrator had no right to apply the proceeds to satisfy the mortgages.[16] The fact that the administrator's account as allowed showed a balance in his hands does not raise a presumption that the subsequent sale of land belonging to the estate was not necessary to pay the debts.[17] Proof that the administrator had received profits from the estate more than sufficient to pay the debts is admissible.[18] Where an administrator de bonis non neglects to cite his predecessor for the purpose of showing administration of personal assets and that they were not sufficient to pay debts, such previous administrator may be cited on petition of any creditor having an interest in such sale.[19]

Mode of proof. It is sometimes required that the insufficiency of the personalty be shown by depositions[20] of disinterested witnesses[21] who must state facts within their own knowledge.[22] But the contestant may controvert by oral evidence the statements in the application[23] or the depositions.[24]

[§ 1529] 15. Trial of Title of Decedent and Adverse Claims to Property. It has frequently been asserted that the court cannot, in a proceeding to sell lands for the payment of debts, decide upon the validity of the title of decedent or adjudicate on adverse claims to the property held or asserted by other persons,[25] except in so far as any doubt as to the title may bear upon the expediency of the sale.[26] But it has also been held that, without trying the absolute title, the surrogate may determine the probable ownership,[27] and in a few states the courts are held to have power to try title in such a proceeding, either by virtue of express statute or by the construction placed on statutes not expressly giving the right.[28]

26. Walker v. Fuller, 147 Mass. 489, 18 NE 400; In re Wood, 138 Mo. A. 258, 120 SW 635.

"We do not sanction the argument of the executors that the probate court had no discretion to exercise, but was bound to order a sale on application therefor in proper form. Though that court could not adjudicaate the issue of title, it did have authority to determine whether or not an existing dispute over the subject of title was of sufficient gravity to cause the property to be sacrificed if sold before the settlement of the dispute and, solving that question in the affirmative, to refuse the application. The rule in such cases thus is stated in Woerner on The American Law of Administration, Vol. II, p. 1128. 'Nor can the title of the deceased to the land proposed to be sold be passed on. . . . If it appear that the title is disputed and that by reason thereof the sale would be made under disadvantageous circumstances, it is proper to stay proceedings until the title may be ascertained in a court of competent jurisdiction.' In Valle v. Bryan, 19 Mo. 423, Judge Scott said: 'It is bad policy . . . to order sales where there is a doubt about the title of the land ordered to be sold when that doubt may be easily removed by a suit.' And in Trent's Adm'r v. Trent, 24 Mo. 307, the Supreme Court, speaking again through Judge Scott, said: 'This court has discountenanced the practice of selling real estate where the title is in such a condition as must produce a sacrifice and when it can be made clear before the sale.' Under such circumstances, the proceedings should be delayed until the title can be relieved from embarrassment. These authorities show jurisdiction in the probate court to refuse the application, on the ground that 'there is a doubt as to decedent's title.' And there can be no question of the wisdom of the ruling of that court. To force a sale of the land while the objectors were asserting that they owned it in fee simple and were resting their claim on the terms of a deed that, to say the least, on its face strongly aids the claim, could not result otherwise than in the sacrifice of the property. The estate would get nothing out of it and if the executors are right in their claim that the testatrix died seized of a fee simple estate, the speculative and venturesome purchaser, and not her creditors and legatees, would profit by the sale." [§ 1530] 16. Dismissal or Discontinuance. An application for an order to sell or to mortgage real estate to pay debts, after jurisdiction of the parties is acquired, can be dismissed only by an order to that effect,[29] and where the insufficiency of personalty imposed on the representative a duty, under the statute, to apply for an order for sale of realty, he has no right to dismiss the proceeding,[30] and after a hearing has been had, the debts proved, and an order of sale made, the administrator cannot at his option discontinue the proceeding,[31] but the creditors may insist upon its further prosecution, and apply, as may be necessary, for reviving or speeding the proceedings.[32] Where an administrator presented a petition to the orphans' court asking authority to sell land alleged to be the property of his intestate, it was proper for the court to dismiss such petition when it was made to appear by those interested that the intestate had but a life estate in the premises,[33] but the fact that an executor or administrator has been removed after a petition to sell lands to pay debts has been filed is no reason why the proceedings should be dismissed,[34] it being sufficient that it is delayed until a properly qualified executor or administrator shall be found to proceed.[35] On an application to sell land for payment of debts, it being admitted that there are no personal assets, a judgment of dismissal on the merits is conclusive against the validity of the claims asserted as debts, and is a bar to another petition by the administrator for the same purpose, there being no evidence of change in the status of the estate.[36] Where the representative petitions for a sale of realty to pay debts, and the defendants, heirs of decedent, file a cross complaint to quiet title to the real estate, a decree dismissing plaintiff's petition, but failing to quiet title, is in effect an adjudication that plaintiff had no claim against such real estate.[37]

[§ 1531] 17. Relief Granted. Where the petition in a suit by heirs to sell land to pay debts did not ask for an accounting and distribution of debts owed the estate by the widow and administrator, or for the determination of the ownership of notes claimed by one of the heirs, the judgment properly left those matters open for a subsequent adjudication.[38] On an executor's petition to sell land there can be no order of sale in favor of a mortgagee on his mortgage in the nature of a foreclosure.[39] If, in a suit to sell a decedent's lands, one not a party, against whom no relief is sought, claiming to be an assignee of an oral contract of sale by decedent to another part of his land, intervenes, setting up the oral contract, praying for specific execution, the court is without jurisdiction to decree such specific performance against infant heirs and defendants not parties.[40]

[§ 1532] 18. Order or Decree of Sale—a. Necessity. Where there is no power of sale given by will, or where in the case of personalty the representative is without power to sell without the sanction of the court, it is absolutely necessary to the making of a valid sale of a decedent's property by his personal representative that there should be an order or decree of the proper court directing or authorizing such sale;[41] and it has been held that a

[c] The burden of proof as to decedent's title to the land, where this is denied, is on the representative. Howe v. Brown, 287 Ill. 532, 123 NE 46.

[d] Presumption from possession.—On a claim interposed by a third person to an administrator's sale of real estate, it is not erroneous to charge that, if decedent died in possession of the real estate, such possession would be sufficient to raise a presumption of title. Rexford v. Bleckley, 131 Ga. 678, 63 SE 337.

[e] Possession of land in the administrator being admitted, and claimant thereto having assumed the burden of proof and failed to carry it, there was no error in directing a verdict against him. Dumas v. Barron, 130 Ga. 736, 61 SE 710.

[f] Admissibility of evidence.—In a proceeding by an administrator to sell land, in which decedent's widow filed a claim to the land by virtue of a certain deed, testimony that claimant had told witness that she wished that the administrator would let it stay as the will was, which will provided that claimant should have the land for life, was admissible on the question as to whether or not claimant held title to the land only to secure a debt, the testimony being susceptible of a meaning tending to show that she preferred a life estate in the land to the interest she obtained under the deed. Wadsworth v. Wadsworth, 134 Ga. 816, 68 SE 649.

[g] Sufficiency of evidence.—Parol evidence that, some thirty years before the interposition and trial of a claim to real estate sought to be sold by an administrator, decedent made a deed to claimant, his son, with no production of the deed or proof of its terms, except a statement that when it was made a bond for title was mentioned, whereby decedent had secured his son against loss on notes executed by the son to creditors of decedent, and that decedent asked the draftsman to make it "so as to sustain" the son from all loss, but with no evidence that the son ever suffered any loss or that the danger thereof still existed and with no possession in him, was not sufficient to show ownership of the land by him, and to prove that the land was not subject to sale by the administrator of decedent. Dumas v. Barron, 130 Ga. 736, 61 SE 710.

[h] Filing of affidavit of claim.—A claim affivadit to prevent an administrator's sale of land should be filed in the court of ordinary, and be transmitted under § 4631 to the superior court. Beach v. Lott, 132 Ga. 70, 63 SE 627.

[i] Damages for delay caused by interposition of claim.—(1) A claim interposed to an administrator's sale for the purpose of delay only renders claimant liable to damages as a claim interposed to an execution sale, to be calculated upon the basis of the value of the property claimed. Rexford v. Bleckley, 131 Ga. 678, 63 SE 337. (2) Where the court is about to dismiss a claim case against an administrator advertising land for sale, for failure of claimant to prosecute, it is allowable for the administrator to have the case submitted to the jury, to assess damages as in cases where the claim is submitted for trial to the jury. failure of the record to show an order of sale is a fatal defect and incapable of being supplied by anything else, whether consisting of a notice of sale, a report of sale, an approval of the sale, or the representative's deed.[42]

[§ 1533] b. Time of Making. Where the probate court has acquired jurisdiction to determine a petition for a sale of decedent's land to pay debts, jurisdiction is not lost by lapse of the term, and an order of sale is not invalid because made at a term subsequent to the one at which the petition was first presented.[43]

[§ 1534] c. Form and Requisites—(1) In General. The order of sale should be based upon the petition presented,[44] and must be made by the court and evidenced by the records.[45] It should show the existence of the necessary jurisdictional facts,[46] the giving of notice to persons interested, where this is necessary,[47] and the necessity for the sale.[48] It is not necessary that it should set out the proceedings upon which it is founded,[49] and it has also been held unnecessary that the court should find and state in its judgment the amount of the debts.[50] Neither is it essential that the order should recite that the rents of the realty are insufficient to pay the debts.[51] Some statutes require that the order or decree shall fix the terms and conditions,[52]

Massenberg v. Denison, 107 Fed. 18, 46 CCA 120. (2) Under the rule that a fiduciary is presumed faithfully to have performed his trust, it will not be presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that an administrator transferred property of the estate without an order of the orphans' court, contrary to statute. [a] Amount of land to be sold.—(1) An order of the probate court directing the sale of more land for the payment of debts than is prayed for in the petition is erroneous. Mays v. Rogers, 37 Ark. 155. (2) Where the petition prayed for a license to sell a specific portion of the real estate, and after publication of a notice to show cause why license should not be granted to sell "the whole of the real estate," a license to sell "the whole of the real estate" was granted, such license was irregular and void. Verry v. McClellan, 6 Gray (Mass.) 535, 66 AmD 423.

[b] On the other hand it has been held that, where the statute does not control the court as to its order of sale by the desire or prayer of the representative, and the petition states the jurisdictional facts, the court has jurisdiction to order the sale of a lot described in the petition, but the sale of which was not petitioned for, and the sale under such order cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that the petition was to sell other real estate. time,[53] and place [54] of sale. A decree for the sale of land to pay debts should state whether a sale of the whole or only a part is necessary,[55] and when the debts of an estate are small in comparison with the assets, which consist of specific articles, the order of sale should designate with as much certainty as possible what articles are to be sold.[56] The order should ordinarily specify the sum which the court has adjudged to be necessary to be raised by a sale of land,[57] although this has been held unnecessary where the property, although represented to be more than sufficient to pay the debts, is so situated that a part cannot be sold without injury to those interested.[58] It is the better practice for the court in all cases where there are several distinct parcels of property, to insert in its order a direction that the sale cease when the amount required has been obtained;[59] but the omission of such a direction does not invalidate the order or the sales made in pursuance of it.[60] A judgment directing a sale of the real estate to pay debts must make necessary provision to protect the interest of infant heirs in the proceeds of the sale, over the sum required to pay the debts,[61] otherwise a sale in excess of the amount necessary to pay debts will be void, even though the real estate is indivisible.[62] It has been held that the order of sale should make application of the assets in the hands of the personal representatives and decree to the several creditors of decedent the sums ascertained to be due to them respectively and fix the order in which they are to be paid.[63] Where the statute simply requires the court to order the sale, it is not necessary to state in the order by whom the sale is to be made.[64] Statutory restrictions as to price to be obtained from the sale need not be specified in the order, if the court does not intend to impose any other restrictions,[65] but the court may fix an upset price.[66] It is not necessary for the order to state what interest decedent had in the land to be sold,[67] and the fact that the order directs a sale and conveyance of the right, title, and interest which decedent had at the time of his death furnishes no reason for a purchaser refusing to take a deed in the absence of proof of any defect of title or of a failure to show that good title.[68] But under a statute providing that when the homestead of deceased is part only of a tract of land, the whole of which was subject to a mortgage, etc., the order of sale shall direct that the entire estate or interest, including the interest of the mortgagee, is so sold, etc., an order of sale which does not provide that the entire estate or interest, including the interest of the mortgagee, is sold is invalid.[69] An order of sale will not be invalidated by a merely clerical error as to the date of the hearing.[70] Under a statute giving the court power to grant an administrator "license" to sell real estate to procure assets, an order granting one license to sell if, in the settlement of the estate, it should be found necessary, is not void as being a conditional judgment, or as attempting to vest the administrator with judicial power,[71] and it has been held that an order of the orphans' court requiring an executor to sell so much of the personalty of the testator as would satisfy all debts, claims, and commissions against the estate, should not be reversed on the ground that it was too general and vested too much discretion in the executor.[72] The au-

[b] Terms prescribed in former order as governing.—(1) Where an order for the sale of several tracts prescribed the terms of sale, a subsequent order for the sale of other property was held to have intended the sale to be upon the terms prescribed in the former order. Sledge v. Elliott, 116 N. C. 712, 21 SE 797. (2) A former judgment of sale fixing the terms and conditions, which was ignored by the court and the parties, did not dispense with such provisions in the judgment under which the sale was made. Underwood v. Cartwright, 47 SW 580, 20 KyL 809.

[c] Error not cured by petition.—An order directing an administrator's sale of a leasehold, but failing to authorize a private sale, at which the leasehold was sold, was not cured, so as to validate such sale, by the fact that the petition asked for a private sale. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 225 Mo. 414, 125 SW 486, 20 AnnCas 1072.

53. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Holverson, 95 Ga. 707, 22 SE 533 (holding, however, that a sale actually made within thirty days from the date of the order, as required by statute, was not void because the order did not require the sale to be made within such time). But compare Yerger v. Ferguson, 55 Miss. 190 (under a statute empowering the probate court merely to decree the sale of the estate of a decedent, it had no discretion as to when the sale should be made or reported).

72. Lowe v. Lowe, 6 Md. 347 (if, under such authority, the executrix should attempt to sell property much beyond the necessity of the case or should act in any manner oppressively to the legatees, they might obtain relief by making application to the orphans' court to stop the sale altogether or to limit the extent of it, or relief might be obtained by injunction from a court of equity).

thority of the court has been held to extend to entering an order directing an executor to make a lease of his decedent's lands for a term and rental specified in the order and to be not limited to a statement of the minimum sum which the executor may receive, leaving it discretionary with him as to whether he will carry out an agreement entered into prior to the making of the petition.[73] Where decedent had delivered, in escrow, a deed of the property to his son, the decree in an administrator's suit to set aside the conveyance should provide that it may be satisfied by the payment of debts and costs.[74] Where the court has authority to decide a question of title,[75] a decree finding that deceased died "having claim or title to the premises sought to be sold" is sufficient, although it does not find the actual title of which he died seized.[76]

[§ 1535] (2) Description of Property. The order or decree should describe the property to be sold with sufficient definiteness and completeness certainly to identify it,[77] and if it does not contain such a description, a purchaser is justified in refusing to comply with his bid.[78] But it has been held that the order of sale and the sale thereunder are not void because the description of the property in the order is imperfect,[79] or even because the order contains no description whatever of the property,[80] where it is apparent that the property sold is that of which a sale was asked and intended.[81] The description in the order may be aided by other portions of the probate record,[82] and where a deed to a portion of the premises has been given under a prior order of sale, a subsequent order for the sale of the entire tract which makes no reference to the former sale is good as to the land which had not been previously sold.[83] Where the description in the order is indefinite, but is made certain by the recitals therein, the sale is valid,[84] but where the description is definite and certain and clearly identifies land which decedent never owned, the sale is void.[85] The rule that when a deed of conveyance contains a general description which is definite and certain in itself and is followed by a particular description, the latter description will not limit or restrict the grant, which is clear and unambiguous by the general description, has been applied to an order of a probate court directing the sale of real property.[86] Where an original order directing an administrator to sell land fully describes the land, it is unnecessary to set forth a full description in a continuing order.[87] It has been held that, where it is not, or may not be, necessary to sell all the land covered by the order of sale, it is not necessary that the order should direct what specific portion thereof is to be sold.[88]

[§ 1536] (3) Signature. It has been held not necessary to the validity of a decree for the sale of land that it should be signed,[89] and that the signature of the judge to the probate minutes is not essential to the validity of the order.[90]

at a subsequent term, and without any supplemental proceedings, entered another and apparently original judgment ordering a sale of the land on different terms, it was held that the second judgment was void,[91] but where the first order of sale was not a final judgment, but an interlocutory order subject to be vacated, set aside, modified, or changed on petition or motion until the real estate was sold under such order, the sale confirmed, and until the end of the term of court at which such sale was confirmed, a second order procured on an amended petition was held valid and binding.[92]

[§ 1538] e. Operation and Effect. An order of sale by a probate court is an adjudication that all the facts exist which are necessary to give the court jurisdiction,[93] and is conclusive as to the necessity of the sale,[94] and even though the order may be erroneous, if all the necessary parties were before the court it is not void.[95] The order or decree is binding on all of the parties to the proceeding[96] and their privies,[97] but is not binding on or conclusive against other persons.[98] Where a decree ascertained certain debts against an estate, and decreed that the land is sold for their payment, and for the benefit of children devisees of decedent as his will directed, and no error is assigned for the allowance of debts, or declaration of the rights of the children claiming under the will, the fact that all the debts have been paid by some of the children does not affect the rights of the devisees to have the land sold for their benefit.[99] When the court has jurisdiction an order granting leave to sell real estate is valid whether passed on good reason or without reason.[1] Mere irregularities in proceedings leading up to a decree for sale are not sufficient to avoid the decree upon the ground of want of jurisdiction.[2] The validity of an order directing the sale to pay debts is not affected by the fact that the probate court granted a rehearing of the demands allowed, after the order directing the sale.[3]

Favorable presumptions. The usual presumptions in favor of an order of court exist in the case of an order for the sale of a decedent's property,[4] and it will be presumed that the order or decree was made upon a proper showing,[5] at least after the time for taking an appeal has passed.[6]

Recital as to notice. Recitals that notice was given as required by statute are sufficient to sustain the jurisdiction of the court on collateral attack,[7] but it has been held that they are evidence of such notice only when the attack is collateral.[8]

As to insufficiency of personalty. An order of sale, being conclusive as to the necessity of the sale,[9] is conclusive as to the insufficiency of the personalty and the necessity of resorting to the realty.[10]

As to existence and validity of claims. An order of sale, being conclusive as to the necessity of the sale,[11] is conclusive as to the existence and validity of debts or claims against the estate;[12] but as such adjudication is only between the personal representative and the heirs or devisees, it establishes the existence of valid debts only as an element of necessity for the sale, and is not a conclusive adjudication as to the existence or validity of particular debts either in favor of or against creditors, they not being parties to the proceeding,[13] nor is it evidence for the representative, on settlement, of the validity of any claims.[14] So also in a suit to establish a claim and for a sale of the property of the estate to pay the claim and distribute the balance of the proceeds, a decree for the sale of the property without making any reference to the claim, rendered on the agreement of the parties that all questions as to the allowance of the claim were to be reserved to be disposed of in the distribution of the proceeds, and that the decree should not affect the validity of the claim, does not preclude the allowance of the claim out of the proceeds.[15] Sometimes, under statute, if a creditor fails to present his claim before a decree on a report of debts allowing it and subjecting lands to their payment, such decree bars him from claiming participation in the proceeds of such land until such decreed debts are satisfied.[16]

Affecting title. A sale of real estate under a valid order passes the title of decedent.[17] An order for the sale of realty invests the personal representative with the legal title thereto so far as to enable him to remove encumbrances thereon by bill in equity and have the title perfected, so that the order of sale may be carried out for the best interests of the estate and of the creditors.[18] An application by an administrator for leave to sell property at private sale does not involve the issue of ownership and hence does not estop him from subsequently suing to recover part of the proceeds of the sale on the ground that he was a part owner of the property.[19] Where an administratrix ob-

[b] Presumption of jurisdiction.—Where the record does not affirmatively show that infant defendants were not summoned and appeared before the court, merely being silent on that question, it will be presumed on collateral proceedings that they were summoned, and that the court would not have rendered a judgment of sale unless they were properly before the court. Dennis v. Alves, 132 Ky. 345, 113 SW 483 [reh den 117 SW 287].

[c] Void and voidable decrees.—A decree of sale is void, if the want of jurisdiction appears on an inspection of the record, but is voidable only and good until set aside, where such want of jurisdiction can be discovered only by evidence aliunde the record. Pinnacle Gold Min. Co. v. Popst, 54 Colo. 451, 131 P 413.

[d] Presumption on motion to set aside.—Since service of process by reading it to a minor is good, unless he is under fourteen years of age, where the record shows service of process by reading it to certain infants, and it does not appear that they were under fourteen years old, it will be presumed on motion many years later to set aside the decree of sale that they were over such age, and that the process was properly served. tained an ordinary's order granting leave to sell all the lands in a named county, except the widow's dower estate, under which the administratrix sold the lands in controversy, the order of sale was admissible in a subsequent suit involving the title, although, after the general grant of authority, it undertook to describe the lands, and did not do so correctly.[20] Where, in a suit by a creditor to sell lands for the payment of debts, judgment was rendered directing the land to be sold, and at the time of such rendition a cross petition alleging title to the land in cross petitioner, and praying that title be adjudged in him, was on file before the court, the judgment necessarily adjudged that cross petitioner had no title, although his name was not mentioned therein.[21]

Affecting setting aside of homestead. The mere fact that an order has been made by the probate court for the sale of the real estate of the intestate does not prevent the court from setting it aside as a homestead for the widow.[22] A failure to set off the homestead of the widow and children on a sale of the property by the probate court to pay debts of the estate was a mere irregularity, which, while it might have been urged on appeal from a decree of the probate court or writ of error to reverse it, was not a jurisdictional defect, and did not constitute a valid objection to the probate court's decree in a collateral proceeding.[23]

Effecting equitable conversion. In England it has been held that an absolute order for the sale of real estate operates as a conversion of such real estate into personalty from the date of the order.[24]

Construction of order. Where it is necessary, the application for a sale may be looked to for the proper interpretation and understanding of the order made by the court upon such application.[25] An order or decree of sale authorizes the sale of all the property properly embraced within its scope,[26] but cannot be extended so as to authorize the sale of other property.[27] A license to "sell" realty imports that the whole title to any estate disposed of is to be parted with for an equivalent in money and not that such estate is to be encumbered for money,[28] and an order authorizing an administrator to borrow money on the real estate is an authority to mortgage it,[29] but not to confess judgment.[30] Under a statute providing that the court may prescribe the maximum period of a loan ordered to be negotiated by an administrator, an order to execute a mortgage therefor payable on or before two years from the date must be regarded as fixing the maximum period only.[31] An order for the sale of land to discharge it of liens, providing that, if the proceeds are insufficient to discharge the mortgage debt, the deficiency shall, upon the order of court, be paid out of the assets applicable thereto in the hands of the administrator, does not adjudicate the priorities of different creditors in the fund.[32] A recital in the order of sale that "it is more advantageous to sell the land" does not show that the sale was ordered for the reason that it would be advantageous to the estate.[33] An order directing the executor to mortgage or sell the property, and containing nothing indicating that the procedure is to be otherwise than as prescribed by law, should be construed to require the executor to take the statutory steps preparatory to sale.[34]

Retrospective effect. It has been held that an order for the sale of the intestate's real estate by the administrator cannot have a retrospective effect, so as to legalize a sale made prior to the order,[35] nor can it validate a prior contract by the representative to sell certain land at a fixed price, the conveyance to be made when the representative has obtained the permission of the court, so as to authorize a conveyance thereunder.[36]

Enforcement after lapse of time. In the absence of a statute on the subject, but by analogy to the statutes of limitations, relating to liens of judgments, a petition to enforce the execution of an order for the sale of the realty of a decedent to pay debts has been held to be barred after the lapse of twenty years from the time of its entry, unless a good reason for a delay is shown.[37]

Revocation.[38] Where, after the granting of a license to sell realty, but before a sale thereunder, the law giving the court jurisdiction to grant such license was repealed, this revoked the license, and a subsequent sale thereunder was void.[39] An order authorizing the administrator to lease property to pay debts is not a revocation of a previous order authorizing a sale for the same purpose, as both powers may stand together.[40]

[§ 1539] f. Amendment or Vacation. An order of a court of probate jurisdiction granting to the representative leave to sell cannot be vacated, rescinded, or revoked by that court, except in the same manner as other judgments, upon notice to the administrator, and for good cause shown.[41] Where the order or decree of sale is void, as where the court acted without jurisdiction in making the same, it may be vacated or set aside, even at a subsequent term,[42] and fraud in obtaining the order has also been considered a sufficient ground for setting it aside;[43] but where the court had jurisdiction, the order of sale will not be set aside at a subsequent term merely because errors or irregularities have intervened in the proceedings, or the order itself is erroneous.[44] After a decree of sale has been executed the probate court has no power to set aside the decree.[45] It seems, however, that the order or decree of sale is open to amendment or correction at all times until it has been acted upon and a sale made thereunder and confirmed.[46] It has been held that, where an account and adjudication show that an award based thereon is to be paid out of the proceeds of sale of real estate sold for the payment of debts, the decree of the court may, fifteen years thereafter, be amended to show that fact, and a surety on the bond of the administrator has no standing to complain of such amendment.[47] It has also been held that a defendant who was served by publication only had the legal right to have an order of sale made upon default set aside upon his mere motion therefor at any time before the sale and within two years after the order was made.[48] The practice of permitting the validity of an ex parte order of sale in a succession proceeding by an executor or to pay debts to be assailed by rule has been recognized.[49] A person who is not in-

Jones, 128 Ga. 791, 58 SE 623. (2) A purchaser of land from one who bought it at a commissioner's sale of decedent's lands to pay debts is a necessary party to a motion to vacate the order for sale. [e] Where the court of ordinary is a court of inferior jurisdiction, the ordinary has authority to revoke his permission to an executor to sell real estate, where such permission was given under a mistake of facts, as it is essential to a court of inferior jurisdiction that it have power to revise and correct its proceedings before they are finally completed and decided on by the superior courts. Radford v. Westcott, 1 S. C. Eq. 596.

[f] Insufficient grounds.—(1) An order decreeing and approving sale of land to pay debts will not be set aside because the claim was fraudulent and the action collusive, it not appearing that the court was deceived thereby. McDonald v. McDaniel, 242 Mo. 172, 145 SW 452. (2) An order directing a sale of the real estate to pay debts, made pending a suit for its partition, will not be set aside on the ground that, if the partition suit had proceeded, defects in the title might have been cleared up and a better price obtained, in the absence of any showing that the real estate would have brought more at partition sale than under an order of the probate court; a partition suit ordinarily not serving the purpose of a suit to quiet title. Mullinix v. Brown, 151 Iowa 468, 131 NW 671. (3) The failure of the commissioner to offer part of the land of a decedent for sale first and of the court to confirm his report of sale do not justify vacating the order for sale. Ramey v. terested in the estate so as to entitle him to become a party to the proceedings for sale has no standing in court to apply to have the order of sale set aside.[50] Where an administrator has been discharged, the judgment discharging him must be reopened before a motion to set aside a judgment authorizing a sale of land by him can be entertained.[51]

The proper course for a mortgagee to pursue on sale of property to pay the debt under a void judgment in proceedings in which the mortgagee was a party defendant, which sale brought less than the mortgage debt, interest, and costs, and destroyed the mortgage lien, is to move to set aside the judgment, and, on the overruling of the motion, to appeal therefrom.[52]

W. Va.—Dudley v. Browning, 79 W. Va. 331, 90 SE 878.

"It is not necessary for us to decide whether or not the order of sale was improvidently made or extravagantly executed to the waste of the plaintiff's patrimony. All we determine is that, on the face of the record as discussed before us, the county court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and all of the persons interested, and being unfettered as to specific devises, because all the land was in one way or the other so devised, that tribunal had the power to decide rightly or wrongly, in either of which cases its decree is immune from this collateral attack." Howe v. Kern, 63 Or. 487, 504, 125 P 834, 128 P 818.

[a] County courts, in ordering the sale of realty to pay a decedent's debt, are courts of general jurisdiction, so that their orders in such proceedings can only be collaterally impeached where want of jurisdiction affirmatively appears on the face of the record. Smith v. Whiting, 55 Or. 393, 106 P 791.

[b] For mere irregularity a judgment in a special proceeding for sale of a decedent's lands to pay his debts can be attacked only directly by motion in the original cause, and not by action to quiet title. Harris v. Bennett, 160 N. C. 339, 76 SE 217.

[c] An objection to a failure to issue citation to a person who, although named in the petition, is not a necessary party in proceedings for the sale of a decedent's real property to pay debts, cannot be raised in a collateral proceeding to enforce a surrogate's decree. Griswold v. McDonald, 81 Misc. 376, 143 NYS 341.

[d] Fraud.—Where an administrator was appointed, and sold land of the estate under order of court, and afterward a will of decedent was admitted to probate, fraud in procurement of the order for sale and notice of the purchaser may be available in proper proceedings to set aside the order and sale; but such fraud and notice will not avail for such purpose upon a mere collateral attack in an ejectment suit by persons claiming as legatees, especially where the ordinary appointed as executor the person previously appointed administrator, but denied a separate application or revocation of the grant of administration. Martin v. Dix, 134 Ga. 481, 68 SE 80.

[e] An action in ejectment to recover land claimed by defendant under an administrator's sale is a collateral attack upon the order of sale, and, if the court had jurisdiction of the person and subject matter, the sale cannot be so attacked, notwithstanding subsequent irregularities, but such irregularities can be taken advantage of only by a direct proceeding for that purpose. Ross v. Martin, (Tex. Civ. A.) 128 SW 718.

[b] Jurisdiction may be inquired into in an action to determine title to the realty sold. Johnson v. Brewn, (Mo.) 210 SW 55.

[c] Who may set up invalidity.—Where a judgment ordering the sale of lands to pay a mortgage debt is void because of failure to summon the infant defendants, the invalidity can be asserted by the mortgagee, who was a defendant, where the sale under the judgment destroyed his lien and realized less than the debt, interest, and costs, and it was not shown that the failure to serve the infants was his fault. Roy v. Allen, (Ky.) 118 SW 981.

[d] Appearance must be shown by record.—In a collateral attack on an order for the sale of land for a decedent's debts, the voluntary appearance of a defendant not personally served, as required, cannot be shown by parol, but must be shown by the record. der which the sale was decreed,[57] such as that an application showing a statutory ground for the sale has been made by a proper person,[58] that a citation was published or notice given as required by statute,[59] that there was a necessity for the sale,[60] and that the court heard satisfactory proof on the subject.[61] It has been held that inasmuch as probate jurisdiction to order the sale of a decedent's land for purposes of administration is derived wholly from statute, jurisdiction in any case should appear of record.[62] Where a district judge at chambers grants a license to an executor or administrator to sell real estate, the record of the proceedings must be made in the district court having jurisdiction to hear and determine the application; that is, in the court of the county in which the administration was granted.[63]

[§ 1543] 20. Appraisal of Property to Be Sold. It is a frequent statutory requirement that realty of a decedent shall be appraised before it is sold,[64] and such requirement is often accompanied by the prohibition against the sale for less than a certain proportion of the appraised value.[65] The records of the court need not show that an appraisement has been made in order for the sale to be valid,[66] nor is it incumbent on one claiming under the sale to prove such fact.[67] Irregularity in the appraisement will not invalidate the sale,[68] and an appraisement sworn to by two out of three appraisers has been held valid.[69] So also it has been held that an appraisement is sufficient, although not signed by the appraisers, if it is attached to their affidavit of qualification, following immediately after the affidavit, and commencing "we appraise as follows."[70] The probate court may correct an error in the description of land appraised for sale,[71] or reject an improper appraisement,[72] and it is also within the discretion of the court to order a re-examination and reappraisement of the property at any time before the sale.[73]

Barrett, 122 Mo. 181, 26 SW 692, 43 AmSR 572.

[d] Effect of failure to have appraisal made.—(1) The fact that a personal representative fails to have land appraised before selling it, as required by statute, does not render the sale void if it is confirmed by the court. It can be set aside only by appeal from the order of confirmation or by a direct proceeding for that purpose, and cannot be impeached in a collateral proceeding. Bell v. Green, 38 Ark. 78; Noland v. Effect on bona fide purchaser of reversal of order of sale see infra § 1703.

decedent's realty is generally considered subject to review by appeal,[75] by writ of error,[76] or by a bill of review,[77] depending upon the practice of the particular jurisdiction.[78] But such an order cannot be reviewed by certiorari.[79] An appeal lies from a judgment of the probate court, rendered on a rule against a personal representative to show cause why the sale of certain property should not be stopped,[80] and an heir at law may appeal from a decision of the surrogate, made in proceedings for the sale of real estate for debts, adjudging certain claims to be valid against decedent and his estate.[81] An appeal does not lie from an order of the probate court directing a personal representative to proceed with the sale of real estate under a previous order directing such sale,[82] an order refusing to set aside a previous order for the sale of decedent's property,[83] or an order directing a personal representative to file a petition to sell real estate.[84] An order to a personal representative to execute a lease of certain realty has been held not to be a final judgment in a special proceeding from which an appeal will lie.[85]

[§ 1545] b. Persons Entitled to Review. In order to entitle a person to a review, he must have an interest in the subject matter of the proceedings,[86] must be aggrieved by the judgment or order complained of,[87] and, unless it is otherwise provided by statutory or constitutional provisions,[88] must have been a party to the proceeding below, or be a legal representative of, or a person in privity with, a party.[89] Where an administrator with the will annexed had been endeavoring to sell testator's real estate for more than twelve years without success, when on obtaining a satisfactory offer he obtained an order directing a sale, and petitioner, one of the distributees, made no objection to the order for more than a year after notice that the sale would be made, and for more than three months after notice that the sale had been made, during which time the purchaser was in possession, making valuable improvements, and changing his position on the faith of his purchase, it was held that the petitioner was precluded by laches from thereafter obterest. The appeal must be prosecuted by the successor of the original representative. Nason v. Smith, 13 Vt. 170.

[a] An administrator has an appealable interest in an order dismissing a petition for license to sell realty. In re Smith, 43 Or. 595, 73 P 336, 75 P 133.

[b] The representative of a representative has not an appealable intaining leave to appeal from the order directing a sale.[90]

[§ 1546] c. Time for Taking Appeal. A statute limiting to thirty days the time for taking an appeal from an order of probate on any issue as to the insolvency of an estate or the allowance of any claim against it, has been held not to apply to an application by personal representatives for the sale of real estate to pay debts, which negatives the issue of insolvency.[91]

[§ 1548] e. Parties. The personal representative must be made a party to an appeal taken in proceedings for a sale of decedent's land,[93] and where the appeal is taken by creditors, heirs who appeared in the court below and contested the claims of such creditors must be made parties.[94] Legatees who appeared below as adverse parties are proper parties to an appeal by a representative from an order refusing leave to sell.[95] A lienholder whose lien is ordered first paid from the proceeds of sale is a necessary party to an appeal from an order directing a sale of land,[96] but it has been held that a devisee, taking an appeal from such an order, need not join as an appellant a codefendant who had filed an undisputed claim against the estate which was ordered to be first paid out of the proceeds.[97] A person who is not a necessary or even a proper party to a proceeding to sell realty to pay debts is not a necessary party to an appeal taken in such a proceeding.[98]

[§ 1549] f. Reservation and Presentation of Grounds of Review. The general rules as to raising questions which it is desired to have reviewed, as to making objections and reserving exceptions in the court below, and as to presenting matters for review in the record on appeal[99] are usually held applicable to appeal from the action of the court with reference to ordering a sale;[1] but it has been held that the fact that creditors having liens on part of the land did not object to the sale of the property in bulk did not prevent them from urging on appeal that there was no evidence authorizing such a sale,[2] and that the failure of lien creditors to object in the lower court to an order authorizing the sale of real estate to pay debts does not prevent them from objecting on appeal that the record fails to show that notice of the application for the order of sale was given as required by law, and that there was no evidence showing any necessity for the sale.[3]

[§ 1550] g. Record. Although the appeal record in a proceeding to sell land to pay debts does not contain the evidence taken by the commissioner upon reference to determine the amount of the indebtedness, the statement in his report that proof was taken will be accepted as true, nothing appearing to the contrary.[4]

[§ 1551] h. Effect of Appeal. An appeal from a decree authorizing a sale of realty suspends the operation of such decree from the time when it is taken, and no action can be legally had under such decree during the pendency of the appeal;[5] and it has been held that pending such an appeal the personal representative has no right to an order authorizing him to rent the land.[6]

[§ 1552] i. Abandonment of Appeal. Failure to docket an appeal until nearly two years after it was taken has been regarded as an abandonment of the appeal.[7]

[§ 1553] j. Presumptions. The usual presumption that an order or decree is correct until the contrary is made affirmatively to appear will be indulged by the appellate court in favor of an order made in proceedings to sell property of a decedent.[8]

[§ 1554] k. Scope of Review. Where an order for the sale of land recites that certain claims against the estate have been allowed and approved, an appellate court will not go back of such order to determine whether any claims had been

R. I.—Jacocks v. Patterson, 18 R. I. 751, 30 A 795.

But compare In re Snow, 96 Me. 570, 573, 53 A 116 ("In order to justify a decree licensing an executor or administrator to sell real estate of the deceased, it must be averred and proved that such sale is necesauthenticated, allowed, and approved;[9] nor will the discretion of the lower court be reviewed on appeal unless an abuse thereof appears.[10] The decision on a question whether it would be for the advantage, benefit, and best interests of a decedent's estate to order a sale of several parcels of real estate, or only of one, is, so far as it depends upon inferences to be drawn from the situation of the property or of the parties interested, not open to review.[11] It has been held that the appellate court has no jurisdiction on such an appeal to determine what credits should be allowed or disallowed to the administrator and what unsecured claims should be paid by him,[12] but has jurisdiction to determine the rights of a surety company which executed the bond for the residuary legatee on her appointment as executrix.[13]

[§ 1555] 1. Disposition of Cause—(1) In General. The appellate court has no greater power in the matter of a sale than the court in which the proceedings were instituted.[14] The action of the court below will not be disturbed because of error which was not prejudicial.[15] Where there was an affirmative showing that it was impracticable to sell the real estate otherwise than in a body, and there was no opposing evidence, an order directing a sale of the whole of the real estate, instead of a part only, should not be disturbed.[16] Where the reversionary interest of a decedent was decreed to be sold, and it was to the interest of all concerned that the property was sold clear of the widow's interest, to which she consented, the cause will be remanded for a new decree according to the adjudicated rights of the parties.[17] Where the probate court denies a personal representative leave to sell, and, on appeal, the circuit court reverses this order and grants leave, it should enter the proper judgment itself instead of directing the probate court to enter it.[18] Where a decree authorizing a sale of land found merely that decedent owned the land and made no findings as to his wife's interest, which was the real issue, and the evidence was not set out in the record, the decree could not be sustained.[19] Where, on appeal from denial of an application for an order directing an administrator to sell realty, no summons in error is served on the administrator or appearance or waiver entered, and the case-made is not served on him, and time for correcting it has expired, the appeal will be dismissed.[20]

[§ 1556] (2) Effect of Sale on Decision of Appellate Court. The fact that a sale has been actually made under the decree appealed from will not affect the decision of the appellate court.[21]

[§ 1557] H. Enjoining Sale.[22] An injunction against an administration sale will be granted where the proper grounds appear.[23] One who was not notified of the proceedings may enjoin a sale which would be detrimental to his interests,[24] but a mortgage creditor has no right to enjoin the sale of his debtor's property for want of notice of the application for the order, when the sale was ordered to pay creditors having a preference over him.[25] A person who has no interest in an estate cannot enjoin a sale of the property thereof.[26] It has been held that an injunction will not be granted in favor of one who alleges that he sary to pay debts, or expenses of sale and administration; or that a sale of some portion of the real estate is necessary for these purposes, and that, by a partial sale, the residue would be greatly depreciated. Revised Statutes, c. 71, § 1, items 1 and 3. Gross v. Harvard, 52 Me. 195. The decree is not evidence of these facts. The party seeking the decree or to have the decree affirmed, must prove them").

is in possession of the land as owner and that decedent had no title thereto,[27] but the preponderance of authority supports the view that one claiming title adverse to decedent may seek relief by injunction against the sale.[28] It is usually considered that persons who can obtain adequate relief in the probate court by a contest of an application for a sale of decedent's realty must pursue that remedy and cannot maintain a bill in equity to enjoin the proposed sale,[29] but there is also authority for the view that equity may afford relief by setting aside a fraudulent judgment of sale and restraining proceedings attempted thereunder, although complainants might urge their objections in opposition to approval of the report of sale.[30]

[§ 1558] I. Authority to Sell[31]—1. In General. In many states the representative is the proper person to make the sale and the court cannot, so long as he is willing and competent to act,[32] appoint a stranger to make the sale,[33] and a sale made by a person so appointed is void and conveys no title.[34] In making a sale under order of court, an executor or administrator acts in his representative, and not in his individual capacity.[35] If two or more executors have qualified they should execute the duties of their office relative to the sale in their joint capacity, and if one alone acts in the sale and in the execution of a deed of the land in question no title passes,[36] but where the order directs the sale to be made by one of several administrators, a sale made according to the order is valid.[37] Under some statutes the sale is made by commissioners appointed by the court;[38] and it has been held that the devisee and not the executor should be directed to sell land for the payment of a legacy charged thereon where the lien of debts has expired.[39] An administrator or other person appointed to sell can sell only as he is authorized,[40] he being an officer or agent of the court in making the sale,[41] and if he has exceeded the scope of his authority in making

Moody v. Harper, 38 Miss. 599.

[b] Necessary averments; parties.—An averment of possession in the complainant is essential to a bill brought by one claiming the legal title to land to enjoin a sale by a commissioner under order of the court upon the ground that the sale will cast a cloud upon his title, and the personal representative is a necessary party to such a will. Bevill v. Smith, 25 Fla. 209, 6 S 62.

[c] Incidental relief to defendants.—Where plaintiff sued to enjoin an administrator from selling property to pay a fraudulent claim, alleging title to the property as an evidence of his right to sue, and defendants were admitted to the suit on the ground that they had become owners of the alleged fraudulent claim, and as an additional defense or cross complaint alleged that plaintiff was not the owner of the property, and set forth title in themselves, and plaintiff was in possession, the court of chancery, having rightfully assumed jurisdiction, would incidentally quiet defendants' title on their establishing it, and award them possession of the premises, and render a decree against plaintiff for the amount of rents collected by him, without remitting defendants to an action at law. the sale, the fact that he acted in good faith and on the advice of counsel is immaterial.[42] An administrator who is unable to make a sale except by a transaction which amounts only to a change in the form of a mortgage debt forming the basis of the petition to sell must take an order allowing him to remortgage the property.[43]

[§ 1559] 2. Administrator De Bonis Non or Special Administrator. A sale by an administrator de bonis non who has obtained an order of court authorizing the sale passes a good title to the purchaser,[44] and an administrator de bonis non may execute an order granted to his predecessor to sell land and thus pass a good title.[45] It has been held that the probate court cannot authorize a special administrator to sell land,[46] but there is also authority for the contrary view,[47] although it is held that an order granting such authority to a temporary administrator does not authorize a sale by him after he has been appointed permanent administrator.[48]

[§ 1560] 3. Agent, Sheriff, or Other Officer. It has been held that, as the order of court which directs the sale of lands usually prescribes particularly as to how the sale should be conducted, there is no special personal confidence reposed in the judgment and discretion of the personal representative, and therefore he may have the sale conducted by his agent and the title will pass,[49] but other authorities maintain that the authority given to sell lands is a personal trust which cannot be delegated to another[50] and that, although the administrator may employ an auctioneer to make the sale,[51] he must himself be present and superintend and control the sale.[52] Where the personal representative is charged by law with the duty of selling the real estate, this power cannot be conferred upon the sheriff[53] or a commissioner appointed by the probate court.[54] But under some statutes the sheriff may make the sale.[55]

[§ 1561] 4. Oath. A personal representative who is authorized to sell real estate of his decedent is usually required to take an oath prescribed by statute,[56] and it has been held that if he neglects to take such oath prior to the sale, the sale is invalid, and no title passes to the purchaser by a deed executed pursuant thereto, and no estoppel is created thereby.[57]

[a] Location of land immaterial.—When it is necessary to sell land under the provisions of a will, such bond must be given regardless of whether the land lies within or without the state where the estate is being administered. Peo. v. Huffman, authorized to sell no more land than is needed for the payment of debts,[60] while under other statutes the rule is that a bond must be required where more land than is necessary for the payment of debts is to be sold, but may or may not be required, according as to whether the judge deems it necessary, where only enough land to pay the debts is to be sold.[61] There are also found statutes which leave the whole matter of requiring a bond to the discretion of the court.[62]

[§ 1563] b. Time for Giving. Although the statute requires that a bond is given before the sale is "ordered or made," a bond given after the order has been made, but before it has issued and before the sale has taken place, is valid,[63] and a sale is not void if a bond is given before the confirmation of the sale.[64] Where the court was authorized to grant leave to an administrator to sell and convey the decedent's real estate on such terms as the court might deem expedient, having first required of the administrator a new bond with security conditioned to perform the decree of the court and to account for the proceeds of the sale, and the statute further provided that if the administrator should refuse or neglect to give the bond for two months after passage of the statute, or if the court should deem it proper to appoint some other person to make the sale, it should have authority to do so, there was a substantial compliance with the statute where the administrator gave the bond after two months had expired, and the court then made a decree authorizing the administrator to sell, and the bond was valid.[65]

[§ 1564] c. Amount. The amount of the penalty of the bond is usually indicated by statute, being determined with relation to the value of the property or the amount which will probably be realized on the sale.[66] After appraisal of the property and before its sale the court may approve a bond in a less penalty than was required in the order of sale.[67]

[§ 1565] d. Obligee. A bond should run to the obligee designated by the statute,[68] and not to the heirs of decedent.[69] A bond payable to the county judge who granted the license to sell is valid, although the land sold is situated in another county.[70]

[§ 1566] e. Form and Requisites. Conditions prescribed by the statute must be inserted in the bond,[71] but the absence of a seal opposite the signatures of the obligors in the bond will not invalidate the sale.[72] A variance between the order of sale and the bond as to the amount to be produced by the sale will not invalidate the sale,[73] nor will this effect follow from the fact that the bond recites the first decree of sale, which has been set aside, instead of a later decree under which the sale was made.[74]

[§ 1567] f. Approval. Where the statute requires that the bond shall be approved in writing by the judge, it will be presumed, where the contrary does not appear, and the case discloses that all other steps were taken with strictness and accuracy, that the statute was complied with in this respect.[75] Where an administrator applied for leave to sell lands to pay debts, and the court required him to give bond, the obligee in the bond being the judge of a district court and the bond being approved by the clerk, a sale thereunder was not void because the bond was not approved.[76]

[§ 1568] g. Presumption as to Giving of Bond. After a great lapse of time it will be presumed, for the purpose of supporting the sale, that the bond was given.[77]

[§ 1569] h. Effect of Failure to Give Bond. According to some authorities an omission to give the bond required by statute renders the sale void,[78]

182 Ill. 390, 55 NE 981 [rev on other grounds 78 Ill. A. 345].

[c] Bond when realty mortgaged by representative.—Griffin v. Johnson, 37 Mich. 87; Fox v. Lipe, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 164.

[d] Proof that bond not given.—In an action to recover real estate so sold, and to remove the cloud created by the sale, the fact that no bond was given may be proved by showing that the record is silent as to such bond, and by testimony of the administrator that none was executed. Babcock v. Cobb, 11 Minn. 347.

[e] Retrospective operation of statute.—A statute requiring such a bond applies to all sales made after it took effect, although the license to sell was granted previously. Babcock v. Cobb, 11 Minn. 347.

[f] Testamentary provision dispensing with bond.—Where a will directs that the executors shall not be obliged to give security, the court of probate should not require such executors, on application for leave to sell real estate to pay debts, to give security, unless it shall see from its own knowledge or from the suggestion of creditors or legatees that fraud may be practiced, or that the personal estate will not be sufficient to discharge the debts. Wood v. Stewart, 120 Ill. A. 34 (a petition by one neither a legatee nor a creditor will not confer jurisdiction to require security).

[a] Within the principle of the statute which requires a sale bond only when more realty than is needed for the payment of debts is ordered to be sold, it is not a fatal defect that an administrator, on receiving a license to sell, gave no bond to account for the surplus proceeds, where the property brought no more than was needed for the payment of the debts. Drake v. Kinsell, 38 Mich. 232.

but there is also authority for the view that such failure is a mere irregularity which does not invalidate the sale, especially where no one is injured by the omission.[79]

[§ 1570] i. Liability on Bond[80]—(1) In General. The special bond given for the sale is in the nature of an additional security,[81] and creates a liability, not for the general administration of the estate, but only with reference to the sale.[82] A failure to distribute the proceeds of a sale of real estate according to the direction of the probate court is a breach of the sale bond and not of the general administration bond.[83] The bond creates a continuing liability and is not exhausted by the first sale under the order.[84] A bond conditioned for the faithful payment and application of the purchase money according to the final decree creates no liability until there is a decree directing payment and application.[85] The sureties are liable for interest upon the proceeds of the sale from the time the administrator received them.[86] The bond protects assets of the estate only for the benefit of those who are entitled to the proceeds of sale,[87] and hence the sureties are not liable for the representative's failure to return to the purchaser the proceeds of a void sale.[88] Where the probate court has directed to whom the proceeds of a sale of real estate shall be distributed, and the order is not appealed from, the refusal of the administratrix to distribute the share to which one of the distributees is entitled to his administratrix, because such distributee mortgaged his interest in the land in his lifetime, is a breach of the sale bond.[89] It has been held that the bond covers only the surplus after paying debts.[90] A bond given voluntarily without a statute requiring it imposes no liability,[91] but where a sale was made without an order and a bond given under a subsequent order taking cognizance of the sale, the sureties are liable.[92]

[§ 1571] (2) Release of Sureties. Returning property unsold for want of bidders does not discharge sureties from liability, but they continue liable on a subsequent sale,[93] even though the terms of sale may be altered.[94] Where an administrator is appointed commissioner to make the sale, he will not be held to have constructively paid to himself as administrator the moneys received by him as commissioner so as to relieve the sureties on the sale bond.[95] A general statute providing for the release of sureties on their own application has been held not to apply to the special bond given on a sale of real estate.[96] Where, under the statute the bond ceases to be operative at the end of a fixed period from the date of the license to sell, if no sale has been made within such time, no subsequent act of the representative can create any liability thereunder.[97]

[§ 1572] (3) Enforcement of Liability. The sureties on a sale bond may be sued thereon without first bringing an action against the principal.[98] In an action by creditors, a complaint which alleges as breaches the failure of the administrator, on demand of the creditors, to apply the proceeds to the payment of debts, and the failure to comply with the order of the court requiring payment thereof into court, and which shows that the administrator withheld proceeds after his removal as administrator, is sufficient without alleging what the administrator did with the proceeds, and without showing that the creditors were injured.[99] In an action on a bond given for the sole purpose of securing proper distribution of the proceeds of sale of real estate for the payment of debts, a statement of claim which fails to aver that an award made by the orphans' court and claimed by plaintiff was a portion of the proceeds of such sale is insufficient to support a summary judgment.[1] In an action by creditors, findings that the administrator on demand of the creditors failed to apply the proceeds to the payment of the creditors, and failed to comply with the order requiring him to pay the proceeds into court, and that he withheld the proceeds after his removal as administrator, are sufficient on which to predicate a judgment on the bond.[2] Where it appeared that the administrator withheld the proceeds, and that the administrator was the principal in an obligation to which decedent was a surety, and the court allowed the administrator for his services a sum less than the amount of such obligation, the court properly provided that the sum allowed for services should not be allowed as a credit to the administrator in his account, but should be paid by him on the indebtedness of the estate.[3]

Where an additional bond was given after real estate had been converted into money, which was in the hands of the administrator to carry out the provisions of the will, it being apparent that the object of the bond was to provide additional security for the preservation of the fund so raised, and the sureties being charged by the probate proceedings with knowledge of the receipt by the administrator of such fund, and the purposes for which it was being held, the sureties could not say, when sued on the bond, that the fund consisted of the proceeds of a sale of real estate which the court had improperly sanctioned.[4]

[§ 1573] J. Notice of Sale[5]—1. In General. It is usually required that notice of the proposed sale be given to interested persons,[6] and in some jurisdictions a sale of real property without the required notice is held void.[7] It has been held that if the representative actually gave the notice required by law, the fact that the court ordering the sale did not require notice to be given does not invalidate the sale.[8] Where the period of notice is prescribed by statute,[9] it has been held that if the notice falls short of the requirements of the statute the sale is absolutely void;[10] but it has also been held that if the order of sale is a general one and does not prescribe the length of notice, the fact that the sale was had under a notice short of the statutory period does not affect the title of the purchaser,[11] although if the order fixes the length of notice to be given it must be strictly complied with or the sale will be invalidated.[12] Under the old chancery practice a reasonable notice of sale was all that was necessary.[13]

[§ 1574] 2. Publication.[14] The statutes generally provide that the sale shall be advertised in a newspaper for a designated period before the sale.[15] The length of the period of publication and the number of insertions during the period is usually fixed by statute,[16] as also is the length ordered him to pay the proceeds to the clerk of the court to be applied to the payment of debts, that the creditors had previously obtained an allowance of their claims, that the administrator failed to comply with the order of the court, or to pay the creditors, that he was afterward removed by order of the court, and that he had in his hands at the time of his removal a specified amount derived from the sale of real estate, which amount he withheld, show that the funds received from the sale of real estate were not paid into court, or to the creditors, or to the administrator's successor).

of time which may or must elapse between the last publication and the day of sale,[17] and the number of newspapers in which publication must be made.[18] The court has usually the power to designate the paper or papers in which the notice shall be published.[19] It has been held that a statutory provision that the notice must be published a certain number of weeks successively is satisfied if the publication appears at weekly intervals for the number of weeks prescribed;[20] but there is also authority for the view that a statute providing for four weeks' publication requires twenty-eight full days' notice.[21] If there is an actual compliance with the law with regard to publication, the sale is valid, notwithstanding the order of the court as to the publication did not conform to the statute in its requirements.[22]

[§ 1576] 4. Form and Contents of Notice. The notice must be published in the English language,[28] and must give the information required by the statute.[29] The notice should state the time of the sale,[30] with sufficient certainty to leave no doubt as to when the sale will occur,[31] and also the place where the sale is to be held.[32] But it has been held that the notice need not state the conditions of the sale,[33] or at least an omission to state the conditions is a mere irregularity.[34] A purchaser may avoid the sale if there has been a misleading mistake in the description of the property in the advertisement or notice;[35] but it is otherwise where, although there were mistakes or omissions in the description of the property, it was such that there would be no difficulty in ascertaining what land was meant.[36] The fact that the notice did not contain the signature of the commissioner who was

[b] Number of insertions.—Under a statute which requires that notice of the time and place of sale shall be published in a newspaper for "three weeks successively next before such sale," it is sufficient if there are three publications at the rate of one a week on regular publication days, separated by intervals of a week, although the paper is published daily. directed to sell the land does not affect the validity of the sale.[37] If an heir is not sufficiently named in the notice the sale is not binding on him and he may attack the proceedings collaterally.[38]

[§ 1577] 5. Proof of Publication or Posting. It is usually required that due proof shall be made of the giving of notice of the sale in a proper manner,[39] although it has been held that proof of advertisement according to law and the order of the court will not be required after the lapse of a long period.[40] A recital in a decree of confirmation that it appears to the court that due notice of sale had been given is sufficient proof, in the absence of anything contradicting it, of posting the notices of sale;[41] and where there was no affidavit of posting in due form legally made and in evidence, but the administrator in his report of sale stated, under oath, that he posted notices, and the report was duly confirmed, the evidence of posting was sufficient.[42] But an affidavit of posting made and filed in the probate court ten years after the sale, without the consent of that court, is not legal evidence.[43] The fact that the judge before whom proof of publication of a notice for the sale was taken did not sign the blank jurat attached to the publisher's affidavit will not invalidate the proof of publication.[44] Under a statute requiring that the affidavit of publication of an order of the probate court for the sale of land be made by the "printer" of the paper in which the insertion was made, an affidavit by the "proprietor" has been held sufficient.[45] If the affidavit of publication was insufficient, a bidder at a private sale may refuse to comply with his bid and may recover his deposit, and an amended affidavit filed after the hearing of the action to recover the deposit cannot obviate the defect or defeat the action.[46]

[§ 1578] K. Manner and Conduct of Sale[47]—1. In General. In making a sale the executor or administrator must comply with every essential requirement of the statute which authorized the sale or no title will pass,[48] and, where the manner of selling is directed by the court, its directions must also be strictly followed.[49] The representative is bound to show a sound discretion in conducting the sale, so as to realize as much as possible,[50] and as the responsibility of preventing a sacrifice of the property is on him and he can therefore refuse to consummate the sale if the property does not bring its fair market value,[51] or if the sale might be set aside by the court on the ground of unfairness.[52] The representative must give all persons who desire to bid at the sale ample opportunity to do so.[53] The mere substitution of one bidder for

[a] Proof of posting.—Proof must be given that the places where the notices were posted were public places; and it is not sufficient to show merely that the notices were posted at a schoolhouse or on a road, as the court will not presume that these are public places within the meaning of the statute. Sowards v. Pritchett, 37 Ill. 517. Compare Hugo v. Miller, 50 Minn. 105, 52 NW 381 (where the affidavit of posting was that the affiant, administrator, "posted three copies of the notice in three of the most public places in the village of Duluth, within which village the land above described is, in St. Louis county and state of Minnesota; that the three most public places were as follows, to wit, one copy posted in a conspicuous place in the United States post office, one in a conspicuous place in the office of the village justice of said village, and one in a conspicuous place on a lamp post at the intersection of Superior street (the main street in said village) and First avenue east," and objection was made to this affidavit on the ground that the places of posting the notices were stated to be in three of the most public places in the village of Duluth, not in three of the most public places in the county, as required by statute; but the court having found that such places were three of the most public places in the county, and confirmed the sale, its determination could not be collaterally attacked).

Scales v. Chambers, 113 Ga. 920, 39 SE 396.

[b] The fact that limitation of time for further bidding was proclaimed, which limitation was afterward repeatedly done away with and the sale kept open, is not a ground for setting aside the sale, as the only effect must have been to quicken and excite the bidders. Fairfax v. Muse, 4 Munf. (18 Va.) 124.

[c] The fact that the day of the

another who fails to comply with the terms of sale cannot affect the validity of the sale.[54] A purchaser may avoid the sale for a material misrepresentation made thereat.[55] The possession of a land certificate by the representative at the time of the sale thereof is not necessary to the validity of the sale where the certificate had become identified with a location and would therefore be naturally in the surveyor's office.[56] In a case where a will indicated an intention to have land sold and the proceeds divided among the beneficiaries, and the estate was taken out of an executor's hands and placed in the custody of the master commissioner of the court, it was held not error, upon proper application, to order the master commissioner to sell the land and distribute the proceeds, instead of resorting to the statutory method of sale.[57]

Discretion of commissioner. The commissioner, in executing a judgment of sale of decedent's land, is the court's agent in advertising and selling, and he has a discretion in matters connected with the sale where the judgment does not specifically direct the course he shall pursue.[58]

[§ 1579] 2. Time of Sale.[59] If the time of sale is prescribed by statute, it must be made accordingly, and a sale made at any other time is without authority.[60] A sale under a license after the expiration of the time prescribed by statute within which such sale shall be made is void,[61] and where the order fixes a time limit for a private sale, a sale made after such time has expired is void.[62] If no time is fixed either by law or by the order granting the license to sell, the sale must be made within the time that the license is operative.[63] The court can, however, usually extend the time within which the sale may be made,[64] and a statute which limits the life of a license to sell realty to a certain period does not limit the power of the probate court to grant a second license.[65] It is sometimes required that the sale shall be made while the court is in session, and a sale at any other time is void.[66] Where the order gives a general power to sell, without restriction as to time, a clause requiring a report at the next term does not limit the exercise of the power to that term.[67] It has been considered that, where the statute limits the sale was cloudy and occasionally rainy is not ground for setting aside the sale where a considerable number of persons were present and bid on the land, and it does not appear with certainty that any person who would have bid for the land was prevented from attending. Fairfax v. Muse, 4 Munf. (18 Va.) 124.

[b] Time of granting extension.—An extension of time within which to sell realty may be granted by the county court, although the year within which the original license was to be exercised had expired, for the discretion of the court may, under the statute, be exercised any time within the two-year limit therein fixed; but an application by the administrator for an extension of time to sell the realty to pay the expenses of administration after all debts and legacies have been paid is too late, when made eight years after the grant of letters, if there is no excuse for the delay except during two and one-half years of the time. Macey v. Pitillo, (Mo.) 21 SW 1094; Macey v. Stark, 116 Mo. 481, 21 SW 1088.

67. Bowen v. Bond, 80 Ill. 351.

time within which actions may be brought against the representative after the grant of letters, the time in which a license to sell may be exercised is not necessarily limited to the same period.[68] An administrator must sell perishable property promptly after receiving the order, or in case of deterioration he will be chargeable with its value at the time it should have been sold,[69] but it has been held that an administrator, having an order for the sale of all the personal property is not liable for failing to make an opportune sale, no liability attaching for mere error of judgment.[70] Although an order of sale may have been obtained in apt time, a delay of twenty-three years, unexplained, in proceeding to compel the administrator to carry out such order, constitutes laches which will bar subsequent proceedings for that purpose, notwithstanding the existence of a dower interest in the lands to be sold.[71]

Hour of sale. The hours of the day within which a sale may be made are sometimes fixed by statute.[72] It has been held no ground for setting aside a sale of real estate in the country that it was advertised to begin at eleven o'clock in the forenoon.[73]

[§ 1580] 3. Place of Sale. The sale is sometimes required to be made in the county in which the land is situated,[74] or, in the alternative, in that county or the county in which the administration is pending,[75] and a sale made elsewhere will not pass title;[76] but in the absence of statute the place of sale is discretionary with the court and the administrator.[77] The place within the county where the sale shall be made is sometimes prescribed by statute, either absolutely or by fixing a place at which the sale shall be made unless the court orders some other place,[78] but it is also sometimes left entirely to the discretion of the representative and the court by which the sale has been ordered.[79]

[§ 1581] 4. Sale in Bulk or in Parcels. Under the old chancery practice land consisting of several tracts should be sold, each parcel separately,[80] and under some statutes, where a piece of real property which is to be sold is susceptible of division, it is required to be divided and sold in parcels,[81] although it may be said generally that whether the sale should be in bulk or in parcels is a matter to be determined in each individual case according to the character and situation of the property and the interest of the estate.[82] Where the petition is for the sale of mortgaged land to pay debts, the court may order a sale as a whole or in parts.[83]

[b] Sufficiency of designation.— Where, upon a petition for leave to sell land, "at the late residence of the deceased," the court granted leave to sell "according to law," a sale at such residence was valid, as the order considered with reference to the petition must be understood as granting the prayer of the petition. Jemison v. Gaston, 21 Tex. 266.

[c] Where a county courthouse had been burned, and no permanent place had been rented for court purposes, an administrator's sale at the side of the burned courthouse was not void because subsequent terms of superior court, by order of judge, were held in a public school building "until suitable provision has been made," and when the court was not in session at the time of such sale, and its clerk, the ordinary, and sheriff all had their offices in another building. Brantley v. Clifton, (Ga. A.) 101 SE 919.

[a] Illustration.—The sale by an administrator of an entire half section of land in a body, excepting and reserving the homestead exemption and widow's dower, which were not judicially ascertained and fixed, in order to pay debts of decedent, is void, under a constitutional provision requiring all land sold in pursuance of decrees of court to be divided into tracts not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres. Shannon v. Summers, 86 Miss. 619, 38 S 345.

[c] Where lots are sufficiently designated by the map of the United States survey and the sale was made in portions easily ascertainable, the objection that there was no division and sale by lots will be disregarded. Walker v. Kimbrough, 27 La. Ann. 558.

[d] Mode of division.—It was a proper exercise of the court's discretion to refuse, without the consent of the administrator, to direct that the property be platted into a city subdivision, before sale, and to require that the land be surveyed and subdivided into parcels containing not less than five or more than ten acres. Quinton v. Neville, 154 Fed. 432, 83 CCA 252.

82. Osman v. Traphagan, 23 Mich. 80, 84; Texas Land, etc., Co. v. Dunovant, 38 Tex. Civ. A. 560, 87 SW 208.

"The regulation to sell in parcels is a wise one, but it ought not to be considered so fundamental as to make its non-observance in every case absolutely fatal to the title under all circumstances. The situation of landed property is infinitely varied. In many instances blocks and other bodies of land are subdivided into contiguous lots or parcels by arbitrary lines, and the parts are so situated in reference to each other as naturally to lead to proceedings respecting separate or distinct parcels as though they were one. The chances for error through mistake or inadvertence in such a matter are very great. . . . The only safe and practicable course is to treat the omission to sell in parcels as a mere irregularity which cannot be resorted to, to invalidate the sale when attacked collaterally." Osman v. Traphagan, supra.

[a] An order to sell the lands of the estate in bulk is erroneous unless based on evidence showing that such a sale will be for the best interests of the estate. Where several parcels of the land are covered by mortgages, an equitable distribution of the proceeds between the lien creditors cannot be made with any degree of certainty, where the sale is in bulk, unless the several parcels are shown to be of equal value per acre. Texas Land, etc., Co. v. Dunovant, 38 Tex. Civ. A. 560, 87 SW 208.

83. Jenkins' Est., 3 Pa. Co. 620 (if

Although the order of sale describes the land as one parcel, the representative may sell it in several lots if in his judgment it will be for the interest of the estate.[84] Under a statute providing that the court may order the representative to sell so much of decedent's lands as is necessary to pay his debts, the court may order the sale of such lands in lots with streets laid out thereon, if a sale in that manner appears advantageous;[85] but a statute providing that the owner of land may plat the same and lay out streets thereon has been held not to authorize an administrator to make the plat for the purposes of selling in parcels where he is licensed by the court to sell the land.[86] An objection to a sale of separate parcels en masse is one which must be made in apt time,[87] and it must be shown that the land brought less than it would have brought if divided.[88]

Where there are two distinct orders of sale, the representative cannot sell the land to which they relate as one tract.[89]

[§ 1582] 5. Public or Private Sale.[90] As a general rule a sale under order of court should be at public auction,[91] and under some statutes a private sale is absolutely void;[92] but under others, although a public sale is the proper mode, a private sale is not void.[93] Under still other statutes the sale may be public or private as the court in its discretion may direct.[94] If the statute does not direct that the sale shall be at public auction a private sale is authorized.[95] It has been held that an administrator with the will annexed, upon whom power of sale of real estate has been conferred by the court, may sell at private sale at his discretion,[96] and also that, although a private sale has been ordered, the probate court has jurisdiction to confirm a public sale.[97] Where the decree authorized a public sale, and the property is sold at a sacrifice at private sale, the sale is properly annulled.[98] It has been held that, where the statute does not prescribe the mode of sale, and the administrator applies for leave to sell at a private sale, and the order is silent as to the mode of sale, directing only that it be according to law, a private sale passes the title;[99] but it has also been considered that, where a probate order directing an administrator to sell a leasehold belonging to the estate to pay debts did not contain a direction to sell at private sale, it would be construed to require a public sale, especially where the lease itself provided that, in case of default by the lessee or his legal representatives or assigns in the payment of rent, the lease might be sold at public auction after two weeks' published notice.[1]

84. Delaplaine v. Lawrence, 3 N. Y, 301, 304.

"The whole tenor of the act relating to these sales, evidently contemplates proceedings similar to those which take place upon other judicial sales. In all such sales, it is the well known duty of the officer conducting them, to sell the property in such parcels as shall be best calculated to secure the greatest aggregate amount. . . . It was for him to determine, in the first instance, to what extent the property was susceptible of judicious division. Nothing short of palpable error or gross abuse of his discretion would justify the surrogate in arresting the sale upon this ground." Delaplaine v. Lawrence, 3 N. Y. 301, 304.

Under sections 112 and 113, the administrator can sell all perishable property and all other personal property of the estate necessary to pay debts or legacies, without an order of court, at public sale, but in no case can he sell any of it at private

A statute authorizing an administrator to sell insolvent evidences of debt at public auction upon obtaining an order of sale from the clerk does not deprive him of his common-law right to sell them at private sale.[2]

[§ 1583] 6. Adjournment. Under an order of court empowering the representative to sell property on a day specified, he may adjourn the sale in the exercise of a sound discretion,[3] and without statutory authority,[4] and he will not be liable for a loss caused thereby.[5] A confirmation of a report stating the adjournment and the reasons therefor is a judgment by the court that in its opinion the representative exercised a wise discretion in adjourning the sale, and this judgment is final and conclusive until impeached and set aside in a direct proceeding.[6] A statute requiring a certain number of days' notice of the time and place of the sale of real estate does not prevent the representative from adjourning the sale to a day less remote from the day originally fixed than the period of notice prescribed in the statute.[7] An adjournment from the court house door where the sale was advertised to be held to another place in the county, near the land in question, is a mere irregularity cured by confirmation of the sale.[8]

[§ 1584] L. Terms and Conditions[9]—1. In General. The representative can make no terms for the sale which are not warranted by statute or order of court,[10] and if he attaches an unauthorized condition the purchaser is not bound to pay the bid.[11] But it has been held that the failure of the administrator to fix the terms of sale in accordance with the statute does not render the sale void, so as to subject it to collateral attack.[12] The representative has the right under a decree to sell land for cash to demand a deposit as a guaranty that the bidder will consummate the purchase if the court approves the sale.[13] It has been considered proper to leave the terms of sale to the discretion of the representative.[14] sale except upon application and an order of court, directing a private sale, and prescribing the terms thereof. . . . The direction of the statute is that the order shall 'prescribe the terms thereof.' Those words are an essential part of the statute, as important as any other, and the statute has been held to be mandatory. The order does not direct that the leasehold be sold at private sale. It simply directs the administrator to 'sell the said leasehold property.' Such an order, without specific direction to sell at private sale, should be considered an order to sell at public sale; and especially should such an order be so considered in this case, since the lease itself provides that in case of default by the lessee or his legal representatives or assigns in the payment of the rents, the lease may be sold at 'public auction,' after 'two weeks' notice' in some newspaper").

Such is the general rule and from it there should be countenanced no serious departure." King v. Gilreath, 154 Ala. 129, 134, 45 S 89.

[a] The representative cannot: (1) Add a condition that the purchaser shall discharge the widow's dower and right of homestead. Selb v. Montague, 102 Ill. 446. (2) Bind personal estate by a statement at the sale of the realty that taxes due and constituting a lien thereon at the time of the sale will be paid by the estate. Sexton v. Sikking, 90 Ill. A. 667. (3) Require the purchaser to buy other property than that of decedent. Savage v. Williams, 15 La. Ann. 250.

[b] A restriction of the quantity of land to less than that advertised to be sold, the restriction having been publicly proclaimed, binds the purchasers so that they cannot compel a conveyance of the whole amount advertised, whether they heard the proclamation or not. Lee v. Hester, 20 Ga. 588.

[c] Representation that sale made for Confederate money.—As the law did not warrant a sale for Confederate money, a declaration of the representative at the time of sale that it was made for such money did not operate as a fraud upon the purchaser. [§ 1585] 2. Cash or Credit. Unless restricted by statute, the court may order the property to be sold for cash or on credit,[16] or partly for cash and partly on credit.[17] If, however, the sale is not made in accordance with the directions of the order, it may not be absolutely void,[18] but its validity may depend on the subsequent ratification of the heirs or devisees, or in a proper case on its confirmation by the court.[19] In some jurisdictions it is held that it is the representative's duty to sell for cash[20] unless the order directs him to sell on credit,[21] or unless all the creditors consent to a sale on credit,[22] and that if loss follows his breach of duty, he will be held liable;[23] but the rule elsewhere is to sell on credit[24] or that whether the sale shall be for cash or on credit is within the discretion of the representative, to be exercised wisely for the best interests of the estate.[25] Another view is that the first offering should be for cash, and if the property fails to bring its appraised value, a sale on credit is authorized.[26] The period of credit is sometimes fixed by statute,[27] and sometimes left to the sound discretion of the probate court.[28] Where the personal representative extends the time of payment he is liable for any resulting loss.[29] The failure of the representative to take security for deferred payments as required by statute or order of court has been held not to render his deed a nullity where the facts have been reported to the court and the sale has been approved notwithstanding,[30] but it has also been considered that, where the order requires the sale to be made on good and sufficient security and the statute gives the representative no power to extend credit for more than one year, a sale is void where the representative sells on a credit of ten years and takes the individual note of the purchaser without security.[31]

Interest on deferred payments. It has been held that, where the terms of a succession sale did not provide for the making of notes with a specified rate of interest, only five per cent can be allowed on the purchase price.[32]

[§ 1586] 3. When Property Mortgaged. Under some statutes, where the property is mortgaged, all that can be sold is the fee subject to the mortgage,[33] and the representative cannot require as a condition of the sale that the purchaser shall discharge the mortgage,[34] nor can he himself remove the encumbrance with a view to a better price when he shall offer the property for sale under an order of court.[35] The more general view, however, is that to be followed in effecting a sale, should be left to the discretion of the representative of the estate, and it is only where exceptional circumstances exist that the surrogate should exercise the power conferred upon him by section 2685 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and authorize a sale in a particular manner or for a specified price").

[b] Credit to representative for payment of liens.—An administrator, who, in selling mortgaged land for the payment of debts, pays prior liens in good faith out of the proceeds of the sale, and complies with an order of the court to take a first mortgage for a portion of the unpaid purchase price, is entitled in his final account to credit for the amount thus paid, where the land sold for its full value, and the sale was approved and confirmed by the court, although the statute requires such sales to be made subject to existing liens. a sale may be directed free of the encumbrance, provision being made for payment thereof from the proceeds of sale,[36] or the representative may make an agreement with the purchaser that the latter shall discharge the mortgage debt.[37] A general order to sell encumbered lands is not sufficient to authorize a sale free from encumbrances,[38] even though a statute authorizes such a sale under certain circumstances,[39] but the order of sale may be amended nunc pro tunc in a proper case so as to authorize a sale already made as free from encumbrances.[40] It has been held that a probate court which has not acquired jurisdiction over mortgaged property of a succession by an omission or commission or laches of the mortgage creditor, whose contract contains the pact de non alienando, has no authority to order the sale of the property affected to him on the terms of part cash and part credit, after appraisement, as he is entitled to demand a sale for cash, and without appraisement.[41] But a creditor of an estate, whose debt operates as a judicial mortgage, and is in a twelve months' bond executed by the deceased, cannot cause the property of the succession to be sold for cash, without the benefit of appraisement, to satisfy his claim.[42]

[§ 1587] M. Who May Purchase[43]—1. In General. If a person making a bid in the names of others complies with the bid and takes title in their names, it is no concern of the heirs whether the person who actually made the bid was authorized to use the names in which the bid was made.[44] The creditors of the estate cannot object to the substitution by a court of equity of one person in place of another as purchaser of the property sold, if the person so substituted in place of the original purchaser is responsible and ready to comply in all respects with the terms of sale.[45]

[§ 1588] 2. Widow or Heirs of Decedent. Property of a decedent sold under order of court may be purchased by either the widow[46] or an heir.[47]

[§ 1589] 3. Guardian of Decedent's Children. A guardian of decedent's children has no right to purchase the property of decedent at a sale by the executor or administrator under order of court,[48] but it is usually considered that if such guardian does purchase the sale is voidable only and not absolutely void.[49]

[§ 1590] 4. Executor or Administrator—a. General Rule. It is well established as a general rule that, where property of a decedent is sold under order of the court the executor or administrator cannot lawfully become the purchaser;[50] and in the application of this rule it is immaterial whether he purchases directly or indirectly through the medium of an agent or third person who purchases ostensibly for himself but really for the executor

In the instant case, we are of opinion, for the reasons stated, that no facts are alleged in the petition which, if taken as true, would authorize the conclusion that the sale of the succession property was even voidable, and still less, void, because made to John B. [a] A purchase by a coexecutor may be avoided by the heirs or devisees, although the purchaser had nothing to do with procuring the order of sale, but the petition was presented, the bond given, and the sale made by another executor. Beeson v. Beeson, 9 Pa. 279. To same effect Greene v. Holt, 76 Mo. 677.

[b] The fact that the sale has been confirmed by the court does not prevent its being afterward set aside by reason of the representative's being the purchaser. McMillan v. Rushing, 80 Ala. 402. [c] Taking place of delinquent bidder.—If the purchaser to whom the land is struck off fails to comply with the terms of his purchase, the property should again be offered for sale. To permit the administrator to substitute himself for a delinquent purchaser would enable him to defeat all genuine competition by receiving the bid of an irresponsible man, and afterward turn it to his own account by voluntarily assuming the place of such bidder, thus acquiring any advantage which the ownership of the property might confer. [a] "No principle is more firmly established in the equity jurisprudence of this country, than that a purchase by a trustee, for his own benefit, at a sale of the trust property, is voidable at the option of the cestui que trust, and will be set aside, if application for that purpose be made in a reasonable time; and it makes no difference in the application of the rule, whether the purchase be direct or indirect, in person or through an agent, or by the medium of a person who subsequently reconveys to the trustee." Calloway v. Gilmer, 36 Ala. 354, 357.

[b] An administrator may not establish any title to land sold under an order of the probate court by virtue of the fact that he as administrator was the real purchaser, or furnished the puchase money to a third person who purchased the property. Pearson v. Murray, 230 Mo. 162, 130 SW 21.

[c] Agreement to purchase for decedent's children.—An administratrix of her deceased husband did not acquire an interest in land sold by her,

ed with fraud or unfairness;[52] but it is not necessary that this should be the case, for the sale may as a rule be avoided merely because the executor or administrator purchased, even though it was fairly made and the price realized was an adequate one.[53] The rule is based on considerations of policy which forbid a fiduciary from deriving any personal benefit from his dealings with the estate committed to his care,[54] and hence applies where the representative purchases as the agent of another[55] with a view to making a profit out of the transaction,[56] or where he derives a benefit from the sale[57] by acquiring an interest in the property, either jointly with,[58] or in the right of,[59] a third person.

[§ 1591] b. Limitations of Rule. The representative may, it has been held, purchase at his own sale if he bids fairly with the knowledge and consent of the next of kin who have at the time full knowledge of the condition of the estate and the value of the property;[60] and if the sale is made not by a representative but by a commissioner appointed to sell, or some other person not acting under the orders of the representative, the representative may properly become a purchaser.[61] Again, if the representative has an interest in the estate, it may be necessary for him to purchase for his own protection, and consequently it is held that in such case a purchase by him will be upheld if the sale is fairly conducted.[62]

such as would render the sale voidable, where she agreed with the purchaser that he should hold the title until the children of decedent became of age and then convey to them, and the heirs of the purchaser after his death conveyed the property to the administratrix individually in order that she might mortgage it for the payment of charges against it. [a] Facts showing fraud.—An administrator, while guardian of one of the minor heirs of the intestate, rendered the estate insolvent, and obtained an order for the sale of real estate. The real estate was inventoried at twenty-seven hundred dollars, but was sold by the administrator for five hundred dollars to a person who shortly thereafter conveyed it to the administrator for a recited consideration of the same amount. No money was in fact paid, either by the administrator or by the purchaser. The administrator charged himself in his account with five hundred dollars as the proceeds of the sale, and was allowed payments and charges to the amount of twelve hundred forty-five dollars forty-four cents, leaving a balance due him of seven hundred dollars forty-four cents. It was held that such facts were sufficient to warrant a finding that the sale of the real estate was a fraud on the rights of such minor heir. Manning v. Mulrey, 192 Mass. 547, 78 NE 551.

[b] Purchase by partner of representative at sale to satisfy claim of partnership.—An administrator is not a person interested in the purchase, within this rule, from the facts that the firm of which he is a member has a claim against the estate, which is one of the claims to satisfy which the land is sold, and that the land was bought by another member of the firm; and the sale is valid in the absence of fraud or collusion. Griffith v. Maxfield, 66 Ark. 513, 51 SW 832.

[c] A sale to a bank of which the representative is a stockholder and officer is voidable. Crawford County Bank v. Bolton, 87 Ark. 142, 147, 112 SW 398 ("A stockholder, and more especially the cashier, who is largely responsible for its success, is interested in the financial prosperity of a bank. Whether the interest is large or small is of no moment; for what would appeal to the cupidity of one man would be no temptation to another. The rule is that the executor or administrator stands in a fiduciary relation to those interested in the estate. It is his duty to conduct the sale and to report to the court any fraud or collusion in bidding or any other facts or circumstances that would warrant the court in not confirming the sale. The rule stands 'upon one great moral obligation to refrain from placing ourselves in relations which ordinarily excite a conflict between self-interest and integrity'").

[d] Right of third person.—(1) If a third person unites with the executor or administrator in purchasing at the sale, it is voidable alike as to him and as to the executor or administrator, for, having joined with the executor or administrator in the commission of an act violative of his duty, and against the policy of the law, such third person must share the consequence. McMillan v. Rushing, 80 Ala. 402. (2) If another person is interested in the bid of the executor, a court of equity will not set aside the sale as to the other person in a case where the sale was by commissioners for full value and there was no fraud in fact. chaser at the sale under order of court and acquire a good title by such purchase if the sale was fairly conducted and there was no understanding at the time of the sale that the representative should share in, or receive the benefit of, the purchase.[63] The mere fact of the representative's subsequent purchase does not warrant a presumption of fraud,[64] but such a transaction is always open to the suspicion that it was only an indirect purchase by the representative at his own sale, and every presumption of indirection must be repelled by clear and convincing evidence.[65] Until the sale is confirmed it is incomplete, and a purchase by the executor or administrator from the purchaser before confirmation is within the prohibition against purchasing at his own sale.[66]

The rule is applicable only to persons who are in fact personal representatives of a decedent, and not to one who, being entitled to administer, procured the appointment of a third person,[67] or who, although appointed administrator or nominated as executor, did not qualify or enter on the duties of the office.[68] So also, where a personal representative has resigned, a purchase by him from his successor in office is not objectionable in the absence of fraud or collusion.[69]

Statutes authorizing a purchase by the representative at a sale of his decedent's property under order of court are sometimes found.[70]

[§ 1592] c. Effect of Unauthorized Purchase—(1) In General. A purchase of property of the estate by an executor or administrator at a sale under order of court, while universally considered to be highly improper, is usually held to be merely voidable at the election of the persons interested, and not void;[71] and even statutes providing that

"An administrator is not precluded from ordinary business transactions with his fellow-citizens, concerning property, or its proceeds, bought at a sale which he has conducted, provided there was no express or implied understanding at the time of the purchase, that the administrator should share the benefit. Such dealings may be evidence to raise the suspicion of fraud; and, taken in connection with other circumstances, may establish it; but they are not conclusive, nor, standing alone, sufficient." such sales are void have been construed to mean simply that they are voidable.[72] There are, it is true, a number of cases in which such purchases have been characterized by the court as "void,"[73] but a careful consideration of such cases will usually lead to the conclusion that the use of this term is an inadvertence, and that the court did not intend to use it in its strictly accurate meaning.[74]

[§ 1593] (2) Title Held by Representative. A purchase by the representative not being void,[75] it follows that until the sale is actually set aside the legal title remains in the representative.[76] He holds the title, however, as a trustee for those whom he represents.[77]

[§ 1594] d. Ratification. Since a sale at which the representative purchases is merely voidable, and not void,[78] interested persons have the right to elect whether they will have the sale set aside or ratify it and hold the representative as trustee for the purchase price.[79] In this connection it has

"The rule is firmly established, both by the text writers and the adjudicated cases, that a purchase by an executor or administrator at his own sale is not void, but is voidable at the election of those who may be interested in the estate." Crawford County Bank v. Bolton, 87 Ark. 142, 146, 112 SW 398.

[b] Surcharging executors as the proper course.—Where executors indirectly purchased the business and plant of a firm of which testator was a member at a sale made by themselves, but it appeared that the property had been disposed of and that the goodwill would probably not bring an adequate price on the second sale, it was held that the sale would not be set aside, but the executors would be surcharged with the difference between the amount realized at the sale and the value of the property and goodwill as shown by the inventory. Matter of Bach, 12 NYS 712, 2 Conn. Surr. 490.

[c] Circumstances under which sale void.—(1) Where the administrator of a succession in which he had no interest as an heir obtained from the deputy clerk of the district court, who had no authority to give it, an order to sell the property of the succession, and a commission issued authorizing the administrator as such to make the sale, and acting as auctioneer he adjudicated the property to himself individually for one thousand and twenty dollars, and this sale was the only attempted act of the administrator, and on the day of his purchase he sold the same property at private sale to a third person for over four thousand dollars, the sale was an absolute nullity. Tucker v. Benedict, 114 La. 203, 38 S 142 (the heirs were not estopped to assert their claim as against subsequent purchasers). (2) If the representative becomes the purchaser of his decedent's land under an order of court granted by the probate court on his petition, without notice to the heirs of the proceedings after the sale, a deed executed under the proceedings will be void on collateral attack. "In further discussing the case it must be appreciated that the word 'void,' as used in the statute, means voidable. Until a sale made in violation of it be set aside in a proper action, the purchaser is vested with the legal title to the land and he cannot be divested thereof except in such proper action brought within a proper time by a person entitled to challenge, efficiently, the validity of the sale." L. § 9095] has held that such a purchase is void, where the title has not passed to a bona fide purchaser without notice, before the sale is impeached. Otis v. Kennedy, 107 Mich. 312, 65 N. W. 219, and cases cited. See, also, Litchfield v. Tunnicliff, 118 Mich. 383, 76 N. W. 760." The inaccuracy of the use of the term "void" in this connection clearly appears when it is considered that if the sale was void in a strict technical sense, even a bona fide purchaser from the representative, without notice, could acquire no title which would be protected as against the heirs).

[b] This is true even though the representative owned a life estate in part of the land, and owned solely a tract sold with the testator's land. Conrad v. Conrad, 152 Ky. 422, 153 SW 740.

[c] Time for action for accounting as to profits.—A statute prohibiting an action for the recovery of any estate sold by an executor or administrator unless begun within five years after the sale does not bar a recovery of profits which an executor or administrator has made from his dealing with the property of the estate, and a beneficiary affirming a sale to an administrator may, after the expiration of five years after the sale, compel an accounting of the profits of the transaction. In re McClear, 147 Wis. 60, 132 NW 539.

[d] When representative not liable for profits.—Where an executor pays a full and fair price at a sale of land of the estate, where there was competitive bidding, and there is no evidence to warrant a conclusion that any advantage was taken or profit acquired by the executor by and through any use or abuse of his trust, such executor cannot be held liable to the estate for the price realized at a subsequent resale, when by the course of events the property had increased in value. Blackmon v. Blackmon, (S. C.) 101 SE 827.

been held that each of the persons interested has an individual election, and a ratification by some of the heirs or devisees will not preclude a repudiation by the others.[80] The election must, however, be a single one as to all of the land sold, the persons interested not being entitled to affirm the sale as to a part of the land and disaffirm it as to the remainder.[81]

Time for election. The right to have the sale set aside must be exercised within a reasonable time after the irregular purchase has become known to the person seeking its avoidance, as acquiescence in the sale for a long time will create a presumption of ratification.[82]

A ratification may be effected by acts done by the persons interested with knowledge of the facts,[83] such as an acceptance of their share of the purchase money;[84] and it has also been held that the sale is ratified where a decree settling the final accounts of the representative, which includes the proceeds of the sale, is made without objection, the court and the beneficiaries having full knowledge of the facts.[85] So also where a party in interest requested the executor to purchase at the sale, his heirs are estopped to question the validity of the sale.[86] But the discharge of the administrator and his sureties, without the rendition of an account, although with the consent of the heirs, does not estop them from suing to recover the land.[87]

When ratification by creditors binds heirs. If the creditors have assented to a purchase by the administrator at his own sale, and the whole estate is sufficient in amount to pay only about fifty per cent of the debts, the heirs cannot have the sale set aside.[88]

[§ 1595] e. Leave of Court to Bid. The court may, in its discretion, grant to the representative leave to bid or purchase at his own sale,[89] and in all cases where it may be proper for the representative to become the purchaser, he should, for his own protection, obtain such permission from the court.[90] Where the court allows an administrator to purchase at his own sale, and the sale is confirmed, he is not responsible to the estate for any profits which he may thereafter realize on the transaction.[91]

[§ 1596] f. Refunding of Purchase Money. The representative is entitled to have the purchase money which he has paid refunded to him where the sale to him is set aside or he is held as a trustee for the persons interested in the property.[92]

[§ 1597] 5. Relative of Representative. A sale to a near relative, or the husband or wife, of the personal representative may usually be avoided.[93] But it has been considered that near relationship between the representative and the purchaser does not compel an inference of fraud, but is merely a circumstance to be carefully considered with the other circumstances in the case,[94] and that an administrator did not, by entering into an agreement with his brother that the latter should bid in land at the administrator's sale, become a purchaser within the inhibition of the statute.[95]

[§ 1598] 6. Attorney of Representative. A sale of realty to the attorney of the representative who obtained the order of sale may be set aside as against public policy.[96]

[§ 1599] 7. Judge, Appraiser, or Commissioner. A purchase by the judge who ordered the sale,[97] by the person who appraised the lands,[98] or by one of the commissioners appointed to make the sale[99] is objectionable. But the fact that one tract of land was purchased by the probate judge does not invalidate a deed for another and different tract sold to another person at the same sale, although both purchases were included in the same report to the probate court.[1]

[§ 1600] N. Bids and Offers—1. In General. A bid must be unconditional in order to be entitled to any consideration.[2] An agreement made by the representative, before obtaining an order of sale, to accept a certain price for land of the estate is not necessarily fraudulent if the sale is subsequently made in pursuance of the forms and requirements of law.[3] The representative offering land for sale at public outcry has the right to withdraw the offer of the land at any time before the hammer falls,[4] but on the acceptance of a bid both the bidder and the commissioner making the sale become bound.[5] If land is advertised as containing about a certain number of acres but is described by metes and bounds and a purchaser bids a round sum for the land, he cannot be held for a greater amount than the price bid, although it is subsequently discovered that the tract contains a considerable number of acres more than advertised.[6] So also where ten acres was ordered set apart and sold, a person making an offer for ten acres described by him acquired no rights in the ten acres subsequently set apart, which did not coincide with the land described in his offer.[7] Where land was knocked down at a certain bid and two persons claimed the bid and the land was immediately re-offered by order of the executors and was knocked down to one of such bidders at a higher price than his previous bid, he became liable to complete his contract at his last bid.[8] If a purchaser files a written bid and the sale is confirmed according to the bid, he cannot have the confirmation vacated and be released on the ground that the terms of the bid vary from the order and notice of sale.[9]

[§ 1601] 2. Chilling Bidding. An agreement or combination whereby the bidding for the property is restricted or prevented is fraudulent and is ground for setting aside the sale.[10] But where the bid of one of the alleged conspirators has been accepted, but the representative has successfully resisted attempts to compel him to complete the sale, and on a resale the property brings less than the amount of such bid, the representative cannot recover from the alleged conspirators the difference between such bid and the amount subsequently obtained for the property.[11]

[§ 1602] 3. Puffing. The employment of a puffer by a person interested in the estate, merely to raise the price at the sale, is a fraud on the purchaser, which entitles him to be relieved from his purchase,[12] although the officer in charge of the sale had no knowledge of the arrangement for puffing.[13] The mere fact that the representative bid at the sale is not, however, a ground for objection by the other bidders if his bid was made in good faith and for the purpose of obtaining the property for himself;[14] nor is the fact that persons entitled to the proceeds of land sold by an executor under order of court engaged a third person to buy at the sale and run the price up to a specified amount, with the understanding that if it was knocked down to him they would take it off his hands, a ground for setting the sale aside.[15] Neither can the purchaser rescind because a person interested in the estate had employed a person obnoxious to the bidders to compete for the purchase, where the administrator was not inculpated in the transaction.[16]

[§ 1603] O. Payment or Recovery of Purchase Money[17]—1. In General. If property is sold to several jointly, each purchaser is liable individually for the entire amount of the consideration.[18] If the administrator purchases property of the succession and gives his note therefor payable to his agent for the use of the succession, a valid obligation is created, the real obligees being the heirs and creditors of the succession.[19] If a person buys property with the understanding that he is to discharge claims against the estate, his obligation, if inchoate, is made perfect against him the moment he proceeds to avail himself of his rights.[20] Ordinarily a purchaser is not entitled to deduct from the price the value of improvements put on the land by third persons whom he may possibly be compelled to remunerate.[21] A sale to pay unpaid probated debts is not rendered void because the court, after the sale, permitted the widow, who purchased the land, to apply her unpaid allowance for dower in personalty to the payment of the purchase price.[22] If a purchaser deposits the price with a notary he takes the risk of loss unless the executor is formally put in default or expressly or impliedly consents to the deposit.[23] If the property is purchased by the husband of one of the heirs, and he retains her share of the proceeds, she cannot avoid the sale on the ground of nonpayment of her portion of the proceeds.[24] Where the proceeds are directed to be divided among testator's children, the administrator is entitled to receive the money in preference to a judgment creditor of one of the children.[25] The rights of a bona fide purchaser of a note given to heirs for the price of land sold at partition sale are paramount to the rights of an administrator seeking to subject the note to the payment of the ancestor's debts as assets of the estate.[26] Where the purchaser was required to make provision for a certain cash payment and to execute bonds for the residue of the purchase price, and the cash payment was made by an order given by a third person for an amount in excess of the cash payment required, the excess could not be applied to satisfaction of the bonds in the absence of an agreement to that effect between the purchaser and the commissioner making the sale.[27]

[§ 1604] 2. To Whom Payment Made. As a general rule the purchase price should be paid to the executor or administrator,[28] although it has

Murphy v. De France, 105 Mo. 53, 15 SW 949, 16 SW 861.

[b] Laches.—The right to have the sale set aside on the ground of fraud on the part of the purchaser in preventing persons from bidding against him may of course be lost by laches. Kellogg v. been held that, where the sale was made for the payment of debts, a payment to a creditor was valid.[29]

[§ 1605] 3. Time for Payment. The purchaser is under no obligation to pay the purchase price until confirmation of the sale,[30] but although the terms of sale contemplated a period of credit in whole or in part, actual payment before such period matures may fairly be accepted by the representative.[31]

[§ 1606] 4. Medium of Payment. As a general rule the representative can receive nothing but money in payment for his decedent's property,[32] and, if he accepts depreciated currency, he is accountable for the full value in standard money, although he acted in good faith.[33] Notes taken by an executor for property sold to pay debts are not assets until they are due and collected.[34]

[§ 1607] 5. When Property Sold Is Encumbered.[35] As a rule the purchaser takes the property subject to fixed encumbrances thereon, and his bid is therefore considered, and the amount thereof must be paid, without reference to the encumbrances.[36] A different rule is, however, sometimes recognized,[37] and where it was a part of the terms of sale that an existing encumbrance was to be released or paid off, the purchaser is entitled to the benefit of the agreement in this respect.[38]

[§ 1608] 6. Purchase by Heir, Distributee, Etc. If a purchaser at the sale is a beneficiary of the estate, a deduction or offset as to the price may sometimes be conveniently made;[39] but a retention of the price or any part thereof is not permissible as against the immediate right of creditors to be paid from the net proceeds of the sale.[40] It has been considered that a distributee purchasing at the administrator's sale cannot enjoin the collection of his bonds for the purchase money until his distributive share is determined and set off against the bond;[41] but heirs are sometimes permitted, by statute, to purchase property of the estate to the extent of their proportionate shares thereof, without obligation to pay the purchase money until a liquidation is had by which it is ascertained what balance there is in their favor or against them.[42]

[a] Payment in discharge of dower.—Where lands are sold to pay debts of the estate, and the purchaser, pursuant to an agreement with the widow, pays her a sum in discharge of dower, he is not entitled to abate his bid to the extent of the payment. Weakley v. Gurley, 60 Ala. 399.

[b] Circumstances under which rule not applicable.—Where the auctioneer announced that the property was subject to a mortgage, that the amount due thereon was unascertained, and that to enable buyers to bid intelligently and know exactly what they were paying for the property, he would cry the sale as if there was no such mortgage, the purchaser might deduct the balance due on the mortgage from the amount of his bid. against Estate or Representative. A simple contract creditor of an estate, who purchases property of the estate, cannot, as a general rule, deduct the amount of his claim from the amount of the price due from him,[43] and the representative cannot ordinarily make a binding agreement with the creditor to allow a credit on his claim in payment of the price.[44] A set-off in such case is open to the objection of lack of mutuality,[45] and to the further and more serious objection that in this way the person to whom the set-off was allowed would obtain an advantage over other creditors of the estate.[46] But under circumstances where the purchasing creditor would obtain no preference a set-off is sometimes allowed[47] and an agreement therefor enforced.[48] A mortgagee or other lienor who becomes purchaser at the sale and is entitled as lienor to receive part of the proceeds of the sale may set off the amount of his lien against the amount of his bid.[49] A purchaser cannot set off an amount paid by him for taxes which have accrued subsequent to the death of decedent and prior to the sale, for the representative is not obliged to pay taxes on land accruing after decedent's death, and the purchaser takes the land subject to any lien thereon for taxes due.[50] The right of set-off or of retaining out of the purchase price, where it exists, is subject to the duty of paying expenses,

"Nor did the fact that payment was made by credit on the probated claim of the purchasers, instead of payment in money, invalidate the sale. Only creditors who were prevented from obtaining satisfaction of their probated claims on account of the excessive payment to Stone & Tyler could complain of this, and their remedy, if any, was against the administrator. The sale was reported to the probate court and duly confirmed, and it does not appear that the interests of any other creditor were prejudiced by this method of accounting for the purchase price of the land." Brown v. Nelms, 86 Ark. 368, 395, 112 SW 373.

(2) "Being the sole creditor of the insolvent estate, the proceeds of the sale, less the costs of administration (which were provided for in the instance at hand), go to him, his debt being in excess of the purchasing bid. No other person is interested, nor the rights of another involved. And the bid sum being at or above the fair value of the property, confirmation by the court was validly effective to complete, upon the credit on the debt being allowed and entered and the cost of administration paid and the conveyance made, the transfer of the legal title from the heir to the purchaser. It would have been, in this case, an wholly useless formality to require the actual payment of the bid sum to the administrator whose almost immediate duty it would have been to return it, less the costs, and fees, to the purchasing creditor." [d] Necessity for bond.—A mortgage creditor who purchases at a succession sale of property on which a mortgage is a lien may retain the amount of his mortgage out of the price on executing a bond with security in favor of the representative for a sum to be fixed by court, conditioned that he will pay such sums as may be ascertained on the settlement of the succession to be payable, in preference to him out of the proceeds of the property so purchased by him up to the amount of his bid. Bellow's Succ., 108 La. 477, 32 S 618; Tertrou v. Durand, 30 La. Ann. 1108.

[e] Vendor's lien.—Under a statute by which the purchaser of land of a decedent which has not been paid for takes subject to the vendor's lien for the purchase money, the vendor himself, upon becoming a purchaser, stands upon the same footing as a stranger, and must pay the amount of his bid without deducting his claim; for, as he purchased at sale only the right, title, and interest of decedent, his bid for the land was in effect the amount of his lien as well as the amount of his bid. Ross v. Julian, 70 Mo. 209.

[a] The mere promise by the representative to allow the purchaser a set-off for taxes paid by him at the request of the representative is not sufficient to bind the estate, in the absence of facts which show a right to charge the estate or that a consideration for the promise arose prior to decedent's death. Moody v. Shaw, 85 Ind. 88.

commissions, or legal costs.[51] A discharge of the personal debt of the representative to the purchaser in consideration for the property is unauthorized,[52] and the sale may be set aside or the purchaser held liable for the purchase money,[53] but if with full knowledge of the facts the persons interested in the estate elect to charge the administrator with the amount in his account, they cannot afterward revoke their election and proceed in equity against the purchaser.[54]

[§ 1610] 8. Security for Purchase Money—a. In General. Where the sale is on credit, such security as the statute requires or authorizes should be taken,[55] and the court cannot authorize, nor can the representative demand, security of a different character.[56] If the sureties on notes offered have all the qualifications required by statute, the representative cannot arbitrarily reject the notes, but if his decision as to the sufficiency of the sureties was made in good faith and with due caution it should stand.[57] The insertion of a condition in the bond that no property other than that purchased shall be levied on for the payment of the bond is beyond the power of an administrator who has been directed to sell real estate and to secure the purchase money by a bond and mortgage.[58] The interest of the heirs in a recognizance given for the price is several and not joint, and the liability of the recognizors is to each of the heirs severally and not jointly.[59] A surety is not discharged for irregularities in the sale if they did not render the same an absolute nullity and have to all appearances been cured;[60] nor will it avail him as a defense to an action on a note given for the price that he became surety in the expectation that the administrator would perform his duty to the estate by also taking mortgage security required by law and by the order of sale.[61] Where a bond and mortgage given for the price are assigned to a creditor of the estate in satisfaction of his claim, they are not extinguished by operation of law, but the assignee may enforce the mortgage.[62]

[§ 1611] b. Vendor's Lien. In equity[63] and sometimes under statute[64] land sold under a valid[65] order of court passes to the purchaser subject to a vendor's lien. The taking of security for the purchase price does not, unless it is so agreed, affect the right to enforce the lien against the land.[66] The representative has no authority to release the vendor's lien.[67] A person not the purchaser who pays the purchase price may be subrogated to the lien.[68] The lien may be enforced against a voluntary transferee[69] or against a purchaser with notice.[70] But the purchaser's vendee who buys a part of the property is entitled to have his land exonerated to the extent of the value of the land yet remaining in his vendor,[71] and if the heirs release the first purchaser they waive the lien to that extent against the land of the purchaser's vendee.[72] Where, under the statute, a conveyance cannot be ordered until the whole of the purchase money has been paid, a decree confirming the sale and directing a conveyance extinguishes the lien or at least casts upon the heirs seeking to enforce a vendor's lien the burden of showing nonpayment.[73] If the lien is once extinguished it cannot be revived by a subsequent transaction between the parties.[74] Laches may extinguish the right to enforce a vendor's lien on the land.[75]

[a] Nature of bond.—The bond contemplated by the act of 1839 to be given to the ordinary by an executor who purchases at his own sale is not a money bond but a bond conditioned to account to the parties interested for the purchase money and interest when the property sold for its value or, if it is sold for less, to account for its actual value. State v. Baskin, 32 S. C. L. 35.

[b] The giving of separate purchase bonds by two purchasers when the land was sold as a whole and the fact that the commissioner making the sale allowed the purchasers to divide the land does not invalidate the sale if each bond was proportioned to the value of the obligor's share of the land. erty, the court may enforce the remedies provided by law against a bidder who refuses to comply with his bid,[76] and may compel the purchaser to perform his contract.[77] The purchaser, however, cannot be compelled to carry out his contract if the decree[78] or proceedings thereon[79] are insufficient to transfer a good title,[80] or if there have been misrepresentations as to the terms of sale,[81] or the property is not as advertised.[82] It has also been held that, where the purchaser fails to comply with the terms of his contract, the representative may treat the property bid off by such purchaser as unsold,[83] or if the highest bidder refuses to comply with his bid, it is not wrong to allow the sale to be returned as made to the next highest bidder.[84] Whether a loss by destruction of the property occurring between the date of sale and the confirmation thereof is to be borne by the purchaser or the estate depends upon the view taken by the courts of the particular jurisdiction as to the time when the purchase is complete.[85] If the purchaser refuses to comply with his bid on the ground that the property

They had substantially bound themselves to sign this deed. It was an obligation on their part to sign, but, owing to their refusal, it remains an incomplete act in the settlement of the succession. The court had sufficient jurisdiction to assert its authority. By becoming adjudicatees, the defendants had made themselves parties to the proceedings; they rendered themselves subject to the court's authority to compel them to do that which they had bound themselves to do or show reasons to justify their conduct. Jurisdiction continues until the sale is completed and the deed signed. Until then, the court having probate jurisdiction has authority to compel obedience regarding the signing of the auctioneer's deed or to order that the property be resold. The following authority is in point: Landry v. Connely, 4 Rob. 127").

[a] Order of sale suspended.—A sale of property of a succession made after the order authorizing the sale was suspended by a new order is a nullity and the purchaser is not obliged to carry out the contract. Michel's Succ., 20 La. Ann. 233.

[b] The rightfulness of the recusation of a judge of the court from which the order of sale issued cannot be put at issue in a rule to compel the purchaser at a succession sale to comply with his bid. Lacroix's Succ., 30 La. Ann. 924.

79. Weber's Succ., 16 La. Ann. 420 (where, however, the court said that it was a different thing if the purchaser complied voluntarily with the terms of the sale and went into possession).

[a] Mere irregularities in the sale do not create a cloud upon the title and will not relieve the purchaser from his bid, for he is protected by the decree under which the sale was made and by his right to restitution in case of loss or injury. Byrne's Succ., 38 La. Ann. 518.

[b] The purchaser cannot object to the title because the widow does not sign the act of sale or because the auctioneer and notary refuse to furnish the title for examination. Merrick v. North, 28 La. Ann. 878.

[c] Proof showing nonexistence of alleged cloud on title.—Where a purchaser of real property at a succession sale refused to accept the title on the ground that one A had an undivided interest in the land by inheritance from a minor who had owned the land in common with decedent, but the proof showed that the alleged undivided interest was transferred to decedent by the minor's parent during her lifetime, and that consequently no title by inheritance passed at her death, the purchaser was properly required to accept the title. Mannessier's Succ., 44 La. Ann. 803, 11 S 139.

[d] Incorrect statement as to title in notice of sale.—The purchaser cannot refuse to pay on the ground that the notice of sale stated a good title whereas the title was not good, where the sale was stated in the notice as a probate sale, for the purchaser was bound to examine the title himself. Halleck v. Guy, 9 Cal. 181, 70 AmD 643.

[a] Purchaser in possession.—The purchaser should not be allowed to remain in possession, and at the same time set up the invalidity of the sale by which he acquired that possession. Before defendant can make this defense, if he can make the defense at all, he should surrender the land. Keen v. McAfee, 116 Ga. 728, 42 SE 1022.

[a] Illustration.—If the purchaser has been misled by the administrator to believe that his bid would be for the land free from encumbrances, he cannot be forced to complete his purchase and pay for the land subject to encumbrances. Kingsbery v. Love, 95 Ga. 543, 22 SE 617.

[b] If the advertised terms of the sale are varied by an announcement made on the day of the sale, it must be shown by clear and convincing evidence that the purchaser had actual knowledge of the altered terms before he made his bid, if he is to be held liable for the deficiency on resale. Daniel v. Jackson, 53 Ga. 87.

[c] Failure of the administrator to comply with an agreement made with the purchaser to apply the purchase money to the payment of encumbrances does not justify the purchaser in refusing to comply with his bid, where the order of sale provided that the land should be sold subject to encumbrances. Maul v. Hellman, 39 Nebr. 322, 58 NW 112.

Fraud as ground for setting aside sale generally see infra § 1671.

Hughes, 140 Ky. 174, 175, 130 SW 1067 ("The accepted bidder acquires certain rights, and there attaches to him certain liabilities upon the acceptance of his bid, which the commissioner is not at liberty to disregard or release. In every instance it is the court that makes the sale. The commissioner's action is the vehicle through which the court offers the property to bidders, and by which the best bid is brought to the court. Whether the bid will be accepted so as to become a binding transaction upon the parties, the litigants acting through the court as vendor, and the highest and best bidder as purchaser, is for the court to decide. There may attach at intervals in the course of the proceedings legal rights and liabilities which the court alone must determine. The parties to the action, in whose behalf the sale is being made, are entitled, as a legal right, to have the highest and best bid at the sale reported to them, that is, to the court, for action upon it. After such bid is made, and the bid accepted by the commissioner as the highest and best bid, the bidder is not at liberty to alone withdraw his offer, nor could the commissioner allow him to do so").

85. See cases infra this note.

[a] Loss falling on purchaser.—Since the purchaser is to be regarded as the owner of the land from the date of purchase, he must bear the loss, if any occurs, during the time is subject to an encumbrance he cannot, after the encumbrance has been discharged, compel a conveyance upon a tender of the amount of his bid.[86] Where a second sale is ordered and is made and approved by the court before confirmation of the first sale, and before giving the purchaser thereat an opportunity on confirmation to take the property at his bid, the bidder at the first sale is released from all liability.[87]

[§ 1614] b. Defenses. That the sale was void for want of authority and that consequently the consideration for the purchase had failed is a good defense to an action for the purchase money,[91] but the purchaser is estopped from showing the illegality of a sale so long as he retains the property purchased,[92] and if the sale has been validated through ratification, the purchaser cannot, when sued for the price, urge the danger of eviction because of informality.[93] It is a good defense that the sale was not advertised as required by law,[94] or that a person entitled to notice of the proceedings was not cited,[95] but mere irregularities in the sale constitute no defense.[96] The purchaser cannot repudiate his bid because of a defective title or no title at all in decedent when there is no fraud or misrepresentation by the administrator;[97] and it is even held that fraudulent misrepresentations by an administrator as to the title or the encumbrances upon the land sold are no defense to his suit for the purchase money.[98] But it has been held that if the purchaser was induced to bid by the promise of the administrator not to enforce payment for a part of the land when held adversely to the estate, until possession of such part could be given, such promise is binding, and payment of the purchase money for that part cannot be enforced if possession cannot be delivered.[99] Where property is sold to pay debts, the purchaser cannot set up invalidity of decedent's will.[1] A mutual mistake of law has been held to be a good defense where there was full knowledge of all the facts and plaintiff could not in good conscience receive the money sued for.[2] To an action for the purchase price of property purchased at an adminis-

necessarily intervening between the sale and the confirmation. Thomas v. Caldwell, 136 Ala. 518, 34 S 949.

[b] Loss falling on estate.— Where confirmation of the sale was delayed until a fire had occurred, the widow and heirs, through whose agency and at whose instance the delay had taken place, could not thereafter insist that the sale is confirmed and the purchaser compelled to take the property. "The purchaser at an administrator's sale cannot defend against the payment of the purchase-money, upon the ground that a paramount title is outstanding in another, by reason of which his purchase will be ineffective. It is only where he fails to get the title which is proposed to be sold that he may defend against the purchase price; and a sale by an administrator only purports to be of so much of the estate as by law is made assets for the payment of debts. If by the sale, therefore, the homestead right of the widow was defeated, the purchaser must pay the purchase price, because he gets the land. If the sale was ineffective to convey the homestead right, he is liable for the full amount of his bid, because the homestead right is in the nature of a paramount oustanding title, of which he should have taken notice at his peril." Cummings v. Johnson, 65 Miss. 342, 347, 4 S 541.

[a] The existence of an encumbrance (1) does not constitute a defense to a suit for purchase money. The purchaser can demand nothing more than a bond of indemnity against future disturbance. Jones v. Read, 1 La. Ann. 200. trator's sale, the plea of ne unques administrator is bad, for the making of the contract of sale admitted the representative capacity of plaintiff.[3] It is no defense to an action for the purchase money that the representative was interested in the purchase and the sale is therefore voidable at the instance of the heirs and creditors who may have been injured thereby.[4] An agreement by the commissioners authorized to sell the land or by the representative, by which only an individual obligation is incurred, cannot be urged in defense of an action for the purchase money.[5] If a purchaser objects to a deed because not in the proper form he should make the objection at the time the deed is tendered;[6] it cannot be raised in defense to an action for deficiency on resale for failure to pay purchase money.[7] It has been held that legatees who purchase, but do not comply with the terms of sale, cannot afterward plead the statute of limitations when called upon for payment, although they may have had four years' peaceable possession, because the decree for sale is substantially a judgment against the purchaser for the purchase money.[8]

[§ 1615] c. Time for Bringing Action. An action to recover the purchase money may be brought before the expiration of the time of credit allowed by the terms of the sale if the purchaser has failed to comply with the terms.[9]

[§ 1616] d. Jurisdiction. If a stranger to the succession withholds the price of property purchased at the sale, an action for the price can be brought only before a court of ordinary jurisdiction;[10] but if a legatee and universal heir retains the price of property adjudicated to him until his share shall be fixed by the partition, his rights must be settled contradictorily with the other heirs under the direction of the probate court whose decree must fix the portion coming to each.[11] When the representative is before the court to which he has reported a sale and by which the sale has been confirmed, and the homologation of his accounts is pending, the parish court has no jurisdiction at the suit of creditors of the succession to compel the purchaser of the property sold to pay the adjudicated price or to decree the property as still belonging to the succession.[12] If the purchaser attempts to set off a judgment which was originally entered in another county and which was transferred to the county where the sale was made, the issue, whether the consideration for the judgment has failed or not, can be tried only in the court having jurisdiction of the sale.[13]

[§ 1617] e. Parties. An action for damages for default of a bidder for land sold under order of court for partition among heirs may be properly brought in the name of the heirs, inasmuch as the legal title is in them and they are entitled to the proceeds of the sale and also to anything recovered for breach of the contract.[14] But an unpaid legatee who is not the legal representative cannot collect notes given for real property of the estate sold under order of court by foreclosing the lien for the purchase money.[15] An administrator de bonis non has the right to enforce the payment of the purchase money for property sold by his predecessor,[16] unless there has been a rescission or resale by the order of court,[17] for his predecessor cannot maintain such an action after removal.[18] In a suit to obtain the unpaid purchase price out of the land sold, the heirs are necessary parties in order that the court may convey a good title to the purchaser under its decree.[19] If to an action for the price of land sold the defense is that the sale was invalid and the title remained in the heirs, the heirs must be made parties.[20] A mortgagee entitled to share in the proceeds of property sold and not paid for may by an hypothecary action enforce his claim against the purchaser, when the administrator, although notified of the proceeding, does not object and no creditor claims a preference on the price.[21] To a suit for the purchase price against the successful bidder at a resale, the defaulting bidder at the first sale is not a necessary party, although he may be a proper party.[22]

[§ 1618] f. Pleadings. The complaint must allege that the sale was confirmed for until confirmed it is not complete or binding and confers no right on the purchaser.[23] In an action for damages against the defaulting bidder, it is not necessary

Jennings v. Jenkins, 9 Ala. 285.

[b] Deduction for deficiency.—Where the purchaser at a sale per aversionem is sued for the price, there being minor heirs, he cannot prove an agreement with the representative and the heirs of age, deducting from the price a certain sum for an alleged deficiency in the quantity; for such an agreement would be an obligation personal to the representative and the adult heirs. "The court was the real vendor, and the administrator was its mere agent to conduct the negotiations, whose acts were subject to confirmato aver that there was a resale.[24] In an action for loss due to a default of the bidder and the necessary resale it is not necessary to allege that the first sale was fairly conducted.[25] The damages against a defaulting bidder being composed of two distinct items, namely (1) the difference between the bid at the first sale and the amount paid at the resale, and (2) the necessary expenses incurred by reason of the resale, a complaint claiming both items is not demurrable because it fails to show that plaintiff is entitled to recover one of them if it contains sufficient allegations to justify a recovery of the other.[26]

Of defendant. A plea of fraudulent representations by the representative is defective if it does not aver that the representations, however false and fraudulent, were relied on in the purchase by defendant and actually deceived him.[27] If the defense is offered that a sale by executors was without authority, the plea should allege that the sale was not authorized by either an order of court or the provisions of the will.[28] A plea in avoidance of liability for the purchase money which alleges that the administrator has refused to let the purchaser into possession or to execute a deed has been held defective in not setting out the contract under which defendant purchased and how that has been violated by plaintiff.[29]

[§ 1619] g. Evidence. There is no presumption in an action for the purchase price that the sale has been confirmed.[30] As against the heirs at law seeking to enforce a vendor's lien against the administrator who purchased, a court of equity will not presume payment of the debt by the administrator to himself, although he reported the sale to the court and it was confirmed and he afterward charged himself with the amount in an annual settlement but in fact never paid it.[31] The burden rests upon the representative to show his appointment and proper authority to make the sale.[32] The admissibility and sufficiency[33] of evidence in such actions are governed by the general rules on the subject.[34]

[§ 1620] h. Trial. Questions of fact arising in an action for a deficiency resulting from a resale are for the jury.[35]

[§ 1621] i. Judgment and Enforcement Thereof. Where an executrix sues an adjudicatee to compel acceptance of title, a judgment by default against the adjudicatee will be set aside where it appears that the executrix in confirming the default failed to introduce in evidence the order of sale in the succession proceeding, such order being the basis of the adjudicatee's title and a necessary basis of the judgment compelling him to accept it.[36] If an administrator relies on the bond and personal security of a distributee for purchases at a sale of his intestate's personalty and takes no assignment of or lien upon her share of the land, he is not entitled to any higher rights as to that interest than any other creditor; and if suit has been prosecuted, and a judgment obtained on the bond, a prior judgment against the distributee will be entitled to be first satisfied out of such interest.[37]

[§ 1622] 11. Resale and Recovery of Difference in Price. The probate court has authority to order a new sale if the purchaser at the first sale fails to comply with his bid.[38] If a resale is necessary on account of the wrongful default of the successful bidder, it will be at the defaulting bidder's risk and he will be liable for any loss resulting from the difference of the prices in the two sales,[39] and tion by the court. Until the bid was accepted by the court, the purchase was incomplete, the bid was a mere proposition to purchase, and did not, therefore, amount to a contract on which any liability could be incurred." Howison v. Oakley, 118 Ala. 215, 23 S 810.

[b] Circumstances warranting resale.—Decedent's property was bid in March 6, on condition that the bidder be furnished a certificate showing clear title, and the bid was confirmed. On July 20, motion was made to set aside the sale and order a resale for the bidder's neglect to pay the balance, the hearing of the motion being continued to August 10 at the bidder's request, and he stating that he could not then raise the money. Title had been accepted in June, and a tender of the deed and a demand for the balance of the purchase price were admitted. It was held that there was no abuse of discretion in ordering a resale. "It appears to be just, that sales by administrators should have the protection of the same rules which apply to sales at public auction by individuals; and no reason can be perceived, why they should be placed in a worse position. They are a part of the administration of justice of the country, and it would appear that every security known to the law should be thrown around them. The rule has been long sanctioned, in regard to public sales, that where the vendee becomes bound for the purchase, as by having the article struck off to him as the highest bidder, and refuses to complete the purchase, the vendor may resell and hold the pur-

this has been held to be true even though the statute, which provides for a resale in case of such default, omits to prescribe that the resale shall be at the defaulting bidder's risk.[40] He is also liable for the expenses of the second sale.[41]

Fixing liability in general. The successful bidder at the first sale must be put in default before any liability for deficiency on the resale can arise,[42] and if the advertised terms of sale were varied by an announcement made on the day of sale, and the purchaser fails to comply with his bid, he cannot be held liable for the difference on a resale, unless it is clearly shown that he had actual knowledge of the altered terms before he made his bid.[43]

Confirmation of first sale. In order to charge the defaulting purchaser with the loss due to his default, it is not necessary that the first sale should have been confirmed,[44] unless the statute establishes such a requirement.[45]

New order of sale. It has been held that no new order for the resale is necessary in order to charge the defaulting purchaser,[46] but there is also authority for the view that such purchaser cannot be held liable for a deficiency on a resale made without an order of court therefor.[47]

Notice of resale. It is not necessary that the notice of resale shall state that the original bidder will be held liable for any difference in the price.[48] If the court orders a resale on account of fraud, the order may be without notice to the fraudulent purchaser;[49] but under a statute which provides that, when it is made to appear to the court that the sureties of the purchaser are insufficient the sale must not be confirmed until the purchaser gives security to the satisfaction of the court, and if such security is not given the sale must be vacated as to the purchaser thus failing, it is a condition precedent to the first purchaser's liability for his default that he should have notice of the finding of the court that his security is insufficient and that he be given an opportunity to furnish security satisfactory to the court.[50]

Promptness of resale. To hold the defaulting bidder liable for the deficiency, it is necessary that the second sale should be made as soon as practicable,[51] or at least within a reasonable time,[52] but chaser responsible, in case of a deficiency of the purchase-money upon the resale, for the difference between the two sales." Mount v. Brown, 33 Miss. 566, 567, 69 AmD 362.

[a] An order annulling a confirmation of a sale, because of the refusal of the purchaser to complete the purchase, and directing a resale does not rescind the contract so as to preclude a recovery for any deficiency on the resale. Banes v. Gordon, 9 Pa. 426.

[b] Where the representative is the successful bidder, having been authorized to purchase, and he refuses to complete the purchase, he is liable for a deficiency on a resale. Matter of Meyer, 177 Pa. 450, 35 A 669.

[c] The commissioner may annex to the terms of sale a condition of resale at the purchaser's risk in case of a failure to comply with his bid, although the court did not so order. Shaw v. Shaw, 21 F. Cas. No. 12,724, 4 Cranch C. C. 715.

[d] The full difference between the amount bid on the first and second sales respectively may be recovered, although the amount bid at the second sale is sufficient to pay all of the decedent's debts and the charges of administration. Cobb v. Wood, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 228.

[e] Damages.—A defaulting bidder is sometimes made liable by statutes for damages in addition to the deficiency. Sypert v. McCowen, 28 Tex. 635; Akin v. Horn, 2 Tex. A. Civ. Cas. § 8.

[f] Proceeding by rule.—Where the highest bidder at a sale of decedent's land fails to comply with the judgment of sale, and that fact is reported to the court, the court on the motion of the parties may have the sale confirmed, so that when a resale is ordered, and a resale produces a less price than the first, the purchaser in the first may be proceeded against by rule at the instance of the parties to make up the loss. Blakeley v. Hughes, 140 Ky. 174, 130 SW 1067.

[g] Jurisdiction.—(1) The probate court has no jurisdiction of an action to recover the deficiency. Bray v. Bray, 16 La. 352. (2) The orphans' court has no jurisdiction to compel the defaulting bidder at a sale not authorized by it to make good the deficiency on resale, where, although some of the parties are minors, the others are sui juris. Claypoole's Est., 3 Pa. Dist. 455 ("Clearly we have no jurisdiction over those of full age, and as the remedy is a joint one, which cannot well be severed, the proceedings should be in a court that can take jurisdiction of all concerned"). (3) It is by no means clear that the orphans' court, upon the adjudication of an executor's account, has jurisdiction to set off against the share of a distributee the difference between his bid at an executor's sale of the property and the amount obtained at a resale rendered necessary by his failure to comply with his bid. But in any event where such distributee, upon failure to comply with his bid, agrees to a resale by the executor without notice to him, and the executor after refusing two offers made for the property at private sale resells it at public sale to a codistributee, who made one of the offers at private sale and for a less amount than the private bid, the court will not, on application of the codistributees, deduct from the share of the first named distributee the difference between his bid and the amount for which the property was finally sold. Morgan's Est., 11 Pa. Co. 152.

[h] If property is resold for a higher price than at the original sale the defaulting bidder is entitled to whatever balance remains of the proceeds of the resale after deducting the proper costs, expenses, and interest. Mealey v. Page, 41 Md. 172. See also Blakeley v. Hughes, 140 Ky. 174, 176, 130 SW 1067 ("A correlative right of his in that event is to receive the difference, if there should be a gain in price on a resale").

[b] Contrary view.—A defaulting bidder is not liable on an implied contract for a deficiency arising from a resale, there being no statutes creating such liability. He is liable in an action for his breach of contract, and the measure of damages is the loss due to his default, and the jury may or may not find that the difference in the two prices is the proper measure of damages. Roberts v. Smith, 137 Ga. 30, 33, 72 SE 410. (2) If the bidder on the day of sale refuses to comply before the crowd disperses and the hours of sale terminate, that day is the proper time to resell; if that cannot be done, just as soon as the property can be readvertised, after notice of refusal to comply with the terms of the sale. 52. Roberts v. Smith, 137 Ga. 30, 72 SE 410; Short v. Ramsey, 18 Tex. 397.

[a] What is a reasonable time depends upon the circumstances of each case. Short v. Ramsey, 18 Tex. 397 (a delay from January to the follow-a delay caused by the delinquent bidder will not discharge him.[53]

Waiver or discharge from liability. The parties or the court may elect to waive not only specific performance by the widow at the first sale,[54] but also the claim for damages against him for breach of his undertaking.[55] If the administrator releases the bidder, the latter cannot afterward be charged with the deficiency upon the resale;[56] and if the representative puts the purchaser in possession and receives a part of the purchase money, he loses the right given him by statute to resell the land at the purchaser's risk.[57] A private sale under leave of court does not operate as a waiver of the original contract with the first purchaser.[58]

Change of conditions and terms. The representative must not clog the second sale with any conditions different from those of the first which are likely to lower the price, if the purchaser at the first sale is to be held liable for loss accruing from the second sale;[59] but a defaulting bidder is not discharged from liability by a mere alteration of the terms of the sale prescribed by the court.[60] The fact that the bidder at the second attempt to sell defaulted does not relieve the first defaulter from his liability, which continues up to the time the final sale is completed, when the measure of damages for which he is liable is determined.[61]

Acquiescence or ratification by defaulting bidder. A defaulting bidder who privately agrees to buy or lease from the second purchaser acquiesces in the judgment divesting his title,[62] and an heir in default on his bid ratifies a second sale and renounces all rights under the first adjudication, where he accepts his portion of the estate, including notes given for the purchase price by the second purchaser.[63]

[§ 1623] 12. Equitable Relief of Purchaser. Equity will give relief against a judgment for purchase money if the decree of sale was invalid.[64] If part of the land mentioned in the decree of sale was not decedent's property, but a sale was effected upon the administrator's promise that he would not enforce payment for that part of the land until the purchaser had possession under a good title, the promise may be enforced by a court of equity.[65] Where, after a judicial sale under order of the orphans' court, the purchaser was tendered a deed, and an offer was made to pay off mortgages executed by the heirs which would vest in the purchaser a fee simple, he could not thereafter maintain a suit in chancery to be relieved from his bid.[66] Neither will a purchaser be relieved of liability because he was under the impression at the time of the bidding that a different tract of land was being offered for sale, where neither the administrator nor any other party interested in the sale was responsible for such erroneous impression and the purchaser could have avoided his mistake by the exercise of the slightest diligence.[67] A bill brought years after the sale to enjoin, because the sale was not confirmed, the collection of the purchase money of property, which became valueless in the purchaser's hands, will not lie.[68] If an injunction is asked on the ground that the purchaser has a valid set-off [69] mutuality must be shown.[70] A purchaser, as a simple debtor, cannot enjoin the execution of a judgment for the purchase money on the ground that the administration bond is insufficient, for it is immaterial to him whether the bond is good or not.[71] Where a surety in an administrator's bond becomes purchaser he will not be relieved in equity from the payment of the purchase money on the ground that the administrator is insolvent, there being no charge of a misapplication of assets.[72]

[§ 1624] P. Report or Return—1. Necessity. Where, under the statutes, the order or decree of sale is final, it appears that no report is necessary to validate the title acquired by the purchaser;[73] but where the order or decree is merely interlocutory, title depends upon a report and confirmation.[74]

If the representative refuses to report the sale for confirmation, the remedy of the purchaser is by motion for a rule to compel a report.[75]

[§ 1625] 2. Time for Making. The report of the sale is generally required to be made to the court at the next term after the sale,[76] but it has been held that, although the statute requires a report to be filed on or before the first day of the term succeeding the sale, a failure to file a report in time will not deprive the court of jurisdiction with respect to the sale, but the report may be filed later and approved by the court, on notice to the parties in interest.[77] A report of sale made after the representative has made a final settlement of the estate and been discharged is an absolute nullity.[78]

[§ 1626] 3. Form and Contents. Where the deed is required to be made in strict conformity with the order of confirmation, the report must state the name of the true purchaser;[79] but where a deed may be made to the actual purchaser, although not named in the order, the report is not conclusive as to his identity.[80] The report should show that the sale was conducted in compliance with the statute,[81] but the same particularity of description is not required in a report of sale as is necessary in a deed.[82] If the land can be identified and it appears that it was actually sold and paid for, the sale is not subject to collateral attack,[83] and the administrator may make a sufficient deed as against the heirs, or a court of equity, on his failure to do so, may vest the title in a bona fide purchaser.[84] Where the sale has been of property subject to encumbrances the return should show either that the administrator has sold merely the equity of redemption and taken security from the purchaser to pay the encumbrances and hold the estate harmless, or else that the sale has been free from encumbrances and that they have been paid off with the proceeds.[85] The report should correctly show the consideration or purchase price,[86] but a recital of payment of the price is not necessary to the validity of the title transferred.[87] The fact that the report was made by only one of two administrators does not affect the validity of the sale.[88] There is a substantial compliance with a statutory requirement that the representative make report of sale where his deed is indorsed as examined and approved by the probate judge, and there is an order of the court that it approved the deed and confirmed the sale.[89]

[§ 1627] 4. Verification. In the absence of a statutory requirement, the report of sale of real property need not be verified,[90] and, although a statute requires a verification, the omission thereof is a mere irregularity which does not render the sale void.[91]

[§ 1628] 5. Amendment. An amendment of the return will not be made at the instance of a stranger to the proceedings,[92] or after confirmation of the sale and execution of a deed to the purchaser,[93] or without notice to the purchaser;[94] but if an executor has knowledge before confirmation of the sale that the property has brought an inadequate price, it is his duty to have his return amended and to have the sale set aside and a new one made for the benefit of the estate.[95]

[§ 1629] 6. Report as Notice. Under a statute providing that deeds shall take effect as to all subsequent purchasers without notice, only after recording, a decree for the sale of land and the administrator's report does not amount to constructive notice of an unrecorded administrator's deed, as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser from the heir.[96]

[§ 1630] 7. Report as Evidence. In an action of ejectment the report of sale made by an administrator is competent evidence to show what land has been sold, its price, and the name of the purchaser, although the report may be insufficient to authorize the granting of an order to make title.[97]

[§ 1631] Q. Confirmation[98]—1. Necessity. Sales of a decedent's property under order of court are usually made subject to the approval of the court,[99] so that until confirmation the title of the heirs is not divested,[1] and the sale remains incomplete and the purchaser acquires no title,[2] but has nothing more than a mere equity.[3] The highest bidder at a sale is not a purchaser and is not entitled to possession until confirmation,[4] nor is he under any legal obligation to pay the amount bid until the sale has been confirmed.[5] Conversely confirmation is a condition precedent to the exercise by the executor of the right to convey title.[6] It is usually considered that confirmation will not be presumed but must be affirmatively shown,[7] although a presumption of confirmation has been indulged after a long period of years where the sale was reported to the court and, on the same day, the presiding judge took the acknowledgment of the administrator's deed,[8] and where the represen-

[a] Reason for rule.—"A sale of land by order of the orphans' court, whether for payment of debts, in partition, or under the act of April 18, 1853, is a sale by the court, through an agent, an executor, administrator, guardian or trustee. The purchaser's offer by his bid, provisionally accepted by the agent, is in law but an offer to the court, and the sale is not complete until the court has signified acceptance by confirming the sale. Until such confirmation, the court may decline the offer, and direct a resale, if this is required by justice or by the interests of the estate." Brittain's Est., 28 Pa. Super. 144, 147. To same effect Demmy's App., 43 Pa. 155 [quot In re Brennan, 220 Pa. 232, 69 A 678, 16 LRANS 859].

[b] Whether realty or personalty is sold, confirmation is necessary. Williams v. Perrin, 73 Ind. 57.

[c] The court of chancery will not decree the specific performance of an agreement to sell land, made by an administratrix under a power of sale from the orphans' court, where the sale has not been confirmed by the orphans' court, since a decree for specific performance would be inefficient and unenforceable. Campbell v. Hough, 73 N. J. Eq. 601, 68 A 759.

The executor or administrator will hold the money, in such case, as a mere depository of the purchaser, and if it is wasted or misappropriated by him the purchaser must bear the loss. tative had accounted for the precise sum for which the land had been sold.[9]

[§ 1632] 2. Jurisdiction to Confirm. The court which ordered a sale may confirm a sale, although it was not made in accordance with the order,[10] but it cannot, by the decree of confirmation, include in the sale property rights which were not sold.[11] The fact that after a sale to pay debts was ordered, but before it was made, the heirs, one of whom was the executrix, entered into a contract to settle the debts of the estate without a sale of the property, which contract was not brought to the notice of the purchaser or of the court until after the sale was confirmed and the deed approved, did not deprive the court of jurisdiction to confirm the sale.[12] The authority of the court to act in confirming a sale will be presumed, unless a lack of authority is clearly made to appear.[13] Where executors, without power to carry on the business of their decedent, have done so, the surrogate's court has no jurisdiction, on application by the executors' assignee for the benefit of creditors, to approve his sale of decedent's realty.[14]

[§ 1633] 3. Time for Confirmation. The fact that the sale is confirmed at a term or time different from that prescribed by law does not render the sale void but merely voidable,[15] whether the confirmation is premature[16] or delayed.[17] It has been held that mere lapse of time without any intervention of the rights of third persons will not prevent a confirmation of the sale under order of court;[18] but it has also been considered that a sale to pay debts cannot be confirmed after the debts have ceased to be liens by reason of lapse of time.[19]

[§ 1634] 4. Notice of Application. It has been held that while notice of an application for confirmation of the sale is desirable and proper[20] it is not essential.[21] Other views are that, where the purchaser makes application for confirmation of a sale, notice to the personal representative is essential,[22] but the heirs need not be notified;[23] that notice to the heirs is not necessary when the application is made by the personal representative,[24] unless the personal representative is the purchaser, in which case notice to the heirs is essential;[25] and that notice to the heirs is necessary after the functions of the representative have ceased.[26] Where the purchaser at a foreclosure sale of a vendor's lien on the land also took an assignment of the debt secured by the lien, as well as of an unsecured debt against testator's estate, and afterward testator's adult devisees instituted a proceeding against the minor devisees for a sale of testator's other land not subject to the vendor's lien, claiming that the proceeds of sale be distributed after the payment of testator's debts, and the land was ordered sold, and the proceeding for such sale was then consolidated with the vendor's lien suit, it was held that the purchaser at the foreclosure of the vendor's lien was entitled to notice of an application for the confirmation of the sale ordered in the proceeding between the devisees.[27]

[§ 1635] 5. Parties. Persons who have no interest in the property are not necessary parties to a proceeding for confirmation.[28]

[§ 1636] 6. Objections to Confirmation—a. In General. On some grounds at least the order of sale may, by the more general rule, be impeached by the heirs or other interested persons upon the return of the report of sale for confirmation.[29] An objection to confirmation may be based upon the ground that the petition on which the sale was ordered,[30] or the proceeding in which the order of sale was made,[31] was defective in some matter going to the jurisdiction or that the person making objection had no prior opportunity to be heard.[32] A person interested in the estate may object to the confirmation on the ground that the sureties on the bond of the purchaser are insolvent;[33] and the court will of course refuse to confirm a sale by an administrator where fraud is made to appear.[34] The effect of statute may, however, be to require the court to confirm the sale in spite of irregularities in the conduct thereof, if compliance with certain essential conditions is made to appear.[35] The object of a hearing upon confirmation not being to settle title to the land in question but to transmit title unencumbered, the court cannot and ought not to confirm a sale if the title in decedent is doubtful and the sale is opposed by an adverse claimant.[36] Where, on a sale for payment of debts, two tracts are sold, and it appears that the amount realized on the sale of the first is sufficient to pay all the debts which had been allowed and the expenses of administration, it is proper to refuse to confirm the sale of the second tract.[37]

[b] An infant interested in the property of a decedent may object to the confirmation of an administration sale of the real property upon the ground of inadequacy of price, even though the infant's claim of title to such property caused the low

[§ 1637] b. Inadequacy of Price.[38] Inadequacy of price is an element proper for consideration when a sale is attacked on other grounds, and will aid in preventing confirmation.[39] Even standing alone, inadequacy of price may be sufficient to prevent confirmation,[40] although when only inadequacy price. In re Bazzuro, 161 Cal. 71, 118 P 434.

[g] Sale of homestead.—Refusal to confirm a sale, under an order, in a suit by a creditor to settle testator's estate is proper, all the property, consisting of a small tract of land left to the widow and occupied by her and the minor children, being sold for less than testator's debts, and the widow, who obtained her means for buying subsequent to the sale, offer-of price is relied on there must be clear and satisfactory proof of the inadequacy claimed;[41] and it has been held that the inadequacy must be so gross as to raise a presumption of fraud in order to prevent confirmation,[42] and that confirmation should not be refused because of inadequacy of price, unless it appears that a higher price could probably be realized on a second sale.[43]

[§ 1638] 7. Evidence. The usual rules of evidence[44] are governed with respect to the burden of proof[45] and the admissibility[46] and sufficiency[47] of evidence in confirmation proceedings.

[§ 1639] 8. Hearing and Determination. The court has implied power to order a hearing on the report or return of sale as to the propriety of confirmation.[48] When the question of the confirmation or setting aside of a sale of land comes before the probate court, much is left to its discretion.[49] The court should confirm the sale where it appears that it was fair and that the sum bid was a reasonable and fair price for the property,[50] but it is proper to refuse confirmation when the court does not consider that the sale has been made fairly or in conformity to law.[51] After the sale to one purchaser

[h] Sale of land in which infant interested.—Where land in which a minor's interest was devised to trustees was ordered sold for cash to conserve such interest, and all of the interests in the property were appraised at twenty-one thousand two hundred dollars, and were sold to the trustees for sixteen thousand dollars, they merely receipting for their own shares and the share of the minor without making any cash payment, it was held that such sale having taken place within thirty days after the property was appraised, an order confirming it was contrary to the interest of the minor, and unsustainable. Johnson v. Bick, 220 Ill. 226, 77 NE 163.

[i] The Louisiana statute (1) requiring an appraisal within twelve months before a sale of a minor's lands renders the sale invalid, if on its first offering it brings less than the appraised value. (2) Where it is sold in three parcels, the purchaser of one cannot be compelled to comply with his bid until sales of the others demonstrate that the aggregate price makes up the appraised value. "The rule is well settled that mere inadequacy of price, unaccompanied by other circumstances which should invoke the exercise of the Court's discretion, is not sufficient, unless, perhaps, it is so great as to raise a presumption of fraud or to shock the conscience of the Court. Inadequacy of price coupled with other circumstances tending to cause it, or with any unfairness or impropriety in the sale, may be sufficient, even though neither, standing alone, would be. But the accompanying circumstance should be such as would of itself tend to call for the exercise of the Court's discretion. If it appears that it has not been so exercised, the error may be corrected as for an abuse of descretion, which does not necessarily imply any improper motive or intentional wrong, but merely that the exercise of the discretion was, under the circumstances, manifestly contrary to reason and justice, or the settled principles of law, or the practice of the Court. The policy of the law is to sustain judicial sales, when fairly made." Farrow v. Farrow, supra.

has been confirmed, the court may, with the purchaser's consent, order the sale confirmed in the name of a different purchaser;[52] but where a sale of land has been confirmed and final settlement has been made and approved and remains in force, the court cannot, years afterward, approve another report of sale presented to it;[53] and therefore a deed given pursuant to such approval conveys no title.[54] If it is discovered after the sale that the estate did not own full title to the land as had been represented, the court may approve an adjustment made by the administrator with the purchaser whereby the estate received more than the appraisal value of the land, and the order of approval is conclusive unless appealed from.[55] Where the administratrix of an insolvent excepts to a second sale of his land under a judgment of sale, on the ground that it deprives her of the right to proceed against the purchaser at the first sale under the judgment, the court should not confirm the second sale until the administratrix and the other parties waive their right to proceed against the purchaser at the first sale, and it is error to confirm the second sale, and thus put it out of the power of the parties to have the first sale confirmed, so as to hold the first purchaser liable.[56]

When land is purchased by the representative,[57] his application for an order of conveyance of the title is regarded as made in his capacity of purchaser instead of in his representative character, and notice to the heirs is essential to the validity of the order, and when the notice has not been given the probate court acquires no jurisdiction to adjudicate the question of the payment of the purchase money or to order a conveyance to the purchaser.[58]

Death of interested party. The death of the purchaser will not prevent confirmation of the sale and the vesting of title in his heirs,[59] but if the administrator, being sole plaintiff in the proceeding, dies before confirmation, the suit abates and a subsequent confirmation without a revival is void.[60] If an heir dies after notice of proceedings to sell and a sale thereafter takes place without further notice or any suggestion of the death of the heir and is confirmed, the sale is valid and not subject to attack by the heirs of the deceased heir.[61]

[§ 1640] 9. Reopening Sale on Advance Bid.[62] The practice of English chancery courts formerly allowed as of course the opening of the biddings before the report of sale was confirmed upon an offer of at least ten per cent advance, payment of costs, and bringing the money into court;[63] but this practice has been strongly disapproved,[64] and is now abolished by express statute.[65] In the United States the practice of opening the sale on an advance bid before confirmation has been followed in some states,[66] but it is usually considered that no advance bid, however large, will suffice to open the sale after confirmation.[67] A reopening of the sale is sometimes especially provided for by statute when it can be shown not only that a higher offer has been made but also that the first sale was at a price disproportionate to the value of the property,[68] and under such a provision both the disproportion between the true value and the price, and the fact that an increased bid can be had, must appear.[69] It is necessary.—Breese's Est., 2 Kulp (Pa.) 62.

[g] Conditional advance bid.—On a return of sale of realty the county court cannot accept an increased bid of ten per cent above that bid at the sale, conditioned upon the title being satisfactory to the bidder. In re Standwaitie, (Okl.) 175 P 542.

(2) "The 'discretion' there referred to, of course, is a legal discretion; but before the court can exercise that discretion, an offer by a responsible person of ten per cent. more than that named in the return must be made. The provisions of that section clearly contemplate that the offer there referred to must be made in the probate court at the time of the hearing of the confirmation, and not a long time after said hearing and after an appeal has been taken to the district court. And there must be evidence showing that the proceedings were unfair and that the sum bid was 'disproportionate' to the value of the claim at the time the bid was made." McGregor v. [b] Circumstances under which resale proper.—Where in a suit by an executrix for settlement of the estate property was ordered sold by a mortgagee, the sale to be advertised for fifteen days at the courthouse door and three other public places, and the courthouse was being repaired and the entrance blocked, and the notice was moved before the end of the fifteen days and the other three notices were placed on trees on the square in which the property stood, and neither the executrix nor her attorney knew the sale was to be had on the day ordered until the morning of that day and she was prevented by sickness from being present, on motion by her, with an offer of an advance bid of about thirty per cent above that for which the property was sold, the court did not abuse its discretion in ordering a resale. Spinks v. Raison, 144 Ky. 539, 139 SW 811.

[c] It is not an abuse of discretion to refuse confirmation because of an offer at the hearing of ten per cent in excess of the price bid at the sale, besides the expenses of a resale. State v. Silver Bow County Dist. Ct., 42 Mont. 182, 111 P 717.

sary that the additional value should have inhered in the property at the time of the sale,[70] and if the full market value at the time of sale was realized, the reason why the market value was low at that time is immaterial.[71] It is within the discretion of the court either to order a new sale or to accept the advance bid.[72]

[§ 1641] 10. Form and Requisites of Confirmation. No formal order[73] or precise form of words[74] confirming the sale of land is necessary. The court's approval is a sufficient confirmation,[75] and anything which expresses the approbation of the court is sufficient.[76] An order of confirmation is not void because it refers to a day subsequent to its own date as the day on which the land was ordered sold,[77] or fails properly to describe the land if the description appears in other parts of the proceedings.[78] But it has been held that, where an order approving an administrator's sale of land contained no description of the land, the sale was invalid.[79] The order will not be held void for failing to show that proof was heard upon the question of the sufficiency of the price given for the land sold.[80] It is sometimes required that an order confirming a sale of real estate should direct that a proper conveyance be made when the purchaser complies with the terms of sale.[81] Failure to confirm the commissioners' report and ordering a resale are equivalent to setting aside the sale.[82]

[§ 1642] 11. Effect of Confirmation or Refusal to Confirm. The order of confirmation cures irregularities in the previous proceedings,[83] such as failure to have the land viewed by disinterested householders of the county wherein it lies,[84] or failure to make any attempt to advertise the sale,[85] or the insufficiency of the publication of a notice of the hearing upon the petition for the sale.[86] It also passes the equitable title to an innocent purchaser,[87] and entitles him to a deed on payment or tender of payment.[88] But confirmation cannot impart validity to a void sale;[89] and where an order of publication is essential to give the probate court jurisdiction to order a sale of decedent's land, the lack of the order is an omission not curable by the order of confirmation.[90] A confirmation of a sale on the administrator's false report that the purchaser has made the required cash payment does not divest the title of the heirs,[91] and the land remains bound for the payment of the purchase money even in the hands of bona fide purchasers.[92] A recital in the decree of confirmation that the purchase money has been paid is conclusive upon the administrator in any proceeding against him by the creditors or distributees of the estate,[93] but not as between the administrator and purchaser,[94] or as against a subsequent administrator, when seeking to enforce a vendor's lien on the land.[95] It has been held that after confirmation, the purchaser cannot contest the proceedings in the orphans' court when sued in a common-law court for the purchase money,[96] but there is also authority for the view that an order confirming an administratrix's sale of assets pursuant to an order of sale is not an adjudication against the purchaser, but is only sufficient to constitute a prima facie case in an action against the bidder.[97] An order made on confirmation of an administrator's sale, permitting the administrator individually to join in the conveyances of land sold, is unnecessary and not conclusive as to the administrator's interest.[98] An order confirming an administratrix's illegal sale of a claim on a policy on the life of her intestate has been held not an adjudication by a court of competent jurisdiction as to the validity of the transfer, which the agent of the insurer had previously procured by fraud to be made to him individually.[99] Ordinarily, after confirmation of the sale of land, the executors cannot be surcharged with any alleged deficiency of price while the confirmation remains unreversed;[1] but where a sale was made in violation of the trust of the executor, his liability for the resulting loss was not affected by the fact that he filed a report of the sale and the same was approved by the court.[2] If a state court having general jurisdiction of the estate confirms a sale of any of the assets, the order of confirmation is conclusive upon a federal court upon the questions of the legality of the sale under the state statutes and of the right to sell the property in question under the order of sale granted.[3] If a sale by an administrator to the widow of the deceased owner is set aside, such widow becomes entitled to payment of the claims which become liquidated and discharged as the result of the purchase by her.[4]

Collateral attack. A judgment confirming a public sale is not subject to collateral attack, although the order of sale directed a private sale,[5] nor is a decree confirming a sale subject to collateral attack, because it treated unpaid taxes on the realty levied after decedent's death as debts within the statute, or because notice was not given.[6]

[§ 1643] 12. Entry upon Record or Registration of Confirmation. The approval of the court should be shown by the record;[7] but it is sufficient if the approval can be gathered from the record,[8] and a formal entry of approval is not necessary.[9] In a few jurisdictions the order of confirmation must be registered or recorded, to be notice to third persons without actual or other constructive notice.[10]

[§ 1644] 13. Review. The approval[11] or disapproval[12] of the sale of land is a final judgment from which an appeal can be taken. Persons who have appeared in the proceedings and whose rights have been affected by the order of confirmation or refusal to confirm may appeal therefrom,[13] and are entitled to notice on appeal by others;[14] and persons interested may appear by leave of court and appeal, even though not originally parties.[15] Parties to the proceeding for confirmation are necessary parties to an appeal from the order or decree made therein,[16] and the purchaser is a necessary party to an appeal by the heirs from an order of confirmation.[17] Where there has been a failure on the part of the probate court to set apart for the use of minor children the property exempt from forced sale and the property has been sold by order of court, it is not error, upon certiorari, to revise and correct the proceedings in the probate court, to join the administrator and the purchaser of the property at the probate sale.[18]

Scope of review. It has been held that on appeal from the order of confirmation of a sale of land, no question can be raised as to the legality of the appointment of the administrator,[19] the propriety and legality of the order directing the sale to be made,[20] or the justice and legality of the debts allowed against the estate.[21] But it has also been held that, where no appeal was taken from an order of sale, on appeal from the order of confirmation, a question as to the jurisdiction to make the order of sale for matter not appearing on the face of the record might be raised.[22] The objection that the property sold for less than its appraised value must be specially pleaded, in order to be considered on appeal from the judgment confirming the sale.[23] As the matter of confirming or refusing to confirm a sale is within the discretion of the probate court, its action in the premises will not be disturbed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is shown.[24] Neither will an order of confirmation be reversed for mere irregularities in the proceedings.[25]

Hearing de novo. Sometimes, under statute, a hearing de novo is had on appeal from the order made in confirmation proceedings.[26]

[§ 1645] R. Second Sale—1. In General. Where the proceeds of realty ordered to be sold for the payment of claims against an estate are insufficient for that purpose, the court may make another order directing the sale of more realty.[27] But this cannot be done until the proceeds obtained from the first sale have been exhausted,[28] and it has been held that, where a sum sufficient to pay claims was realized at the sale but such sum has been lost or misapplied by the representative, a sale of other realty to pay the claims cannot be ordered.[29] Where a sale of realty has failed for lack of bidders, or because of the insufficiency of the amount bid, such realty may be again offered for sale,[30] and where the court vacates or refuses to confirm a sale, a resale of the property is proper.[31] Where a sale of the homestead of an intestate was made without an appraisement, as required by statute, and the widow, as administratrix, not knowing that she had no right so to do, bid in the property, and subsequently, believing that these two defects invalidated her title, she brought an action, making her infant children and their guardian parties defendant, and asking a resale, and the infant defendants answered admitting the allegations of the petition, and joining in the prayer for resale, and at the resale the property brought considerably more than at the first sale, it was held that the second sale was valid.[32]

[§ 1646] 2. New Proceedings. Where a sale of additional realty becomes necessary, new proceedings should be instituted, new notice given to the parties interested, and another order of sale obtained;[33] but where for any reason an attempted sale has failed, entirely new proceedings are not necessary to enable the personal representative again to offer the same property for sale.[34] Accordingly, where a sale is set aside and a resale ordered, the order of resale is sufficient if it merely directs the execution of the former order, without itself ordering the sale, describing the land, and prescribing the terms of sale.[35]

[§ 1647] S. Annulling Sales after Confirmation —1. In General. As a general rule it is too late to make objections to a sale under order of the court, after confirmation, payment of the purchase money, and delivery of a deed;[36] but there are exceptions to this rule, and the court may, when equity requires it, review its adjudication and revoke the confirmation.[37]

Gilchrist v. Rea, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 66.

Owens, 32 La. Ann. 265.

[e] Land repurchased by personal representative.—Where land sold to pay debts is repurchased by the personal representative for the estate, a second order to sell it need not be founded on a new order to show cause why the land should not be sold. Stowe v. Banks, 123 Mo. 672, 27 SW 347.

ministratrix at her own sale.[52]

[§ 1649] b. Estoppel—(1) In General. One who might otherwise successfully attack a sale may be estopped from so doing, the principles governing such estoppel being practically the same as those applying to estoppel generally.[53] Thus one will not be heard to object to the regularity of proceedings had on his own application,[54] instigation,[55] or consent,[56] or which he has aided in carrying into effect.[57] Neither will one be heard to complain of defects for the existence of which he is himself responsible.[58]

Assertion of title or claim. A person may estop himself from attacking the proceedings or particular features thereof by himself asserting title thereunder,[59] and an heir cannot take advantage of the acts of one claiming to be administrator in establishing a land certificate, which was supposed to have been lost to the estate, and then contest its sale on the ground that the administrator was not lawfully appointed.[60] It has been held that a party to the proceeding who fails to set up an adverse claim to the property is estopped in pais, although the court could not in that proceeding adjudicate his claim.[61]

Where one is interested in two capacities, he is usually held to be estopped in one by his acts in the other.[62]

Presence and conduct at sale. One may be estopped by being present at the sale and so conducting himself thereat as to induce another to purchase,[63] as for instance declaring that the purchaser would get good title;[64] but mere presence at the sale, without affirmative acts inducing any one to purchase, will not usually work an estoppel,[65] although it has been held that a widow cannot object to a sale because it was made without her consent where she was present thereat and purchased part of the property,[66] nor can one who was present at the sale make an objection based upon lack of notice.[67]

Doctrine of res judicata. The ordinary principles of res judicata apply to proceedings for the sale of a decedent's property and proceedings attacking such sale, and parties thereto are concluded by determinations made in such proceedings,[68] even

[a] No injury resulting.—The erroneous belief by the heirs of the holder of a headright certificate, that a transfer of the certificate by the administratrix of the holder under order of the probate court was valid, and subsequent acquiescence for a time, has been held not sufficient to estop such heirs to assert title to the land, where the transferees did not take possession of the land, and did nothing to their injury in reliance on such acquiescence. Broocks v. Payne, 58 Tex. Civ. A. 513, 124 SW 463.

[b] Effect of fraud.—A purchaser who was induced to purchase by false representation as to the width of a street on which the property faced is not estopped to recind the sale by reason of the fact that the administrator has, with the purchaser's knowledge and consent, paid out the purchase money in the payment of liens on the property. with regard to questions not litigated but which there was an opportunity to litigate.[69] Where an administrator's sale of land was void, the fact that the heirs received and disposed of the remainder of the estate without protesting against the invalid sale did not estop them from afterward asserting the invalidity of the sale.[70]

Failure to appear and contest. The law provides the method by which a party may be brought into court, and, if this method is not followed, he is under no legal or moral obligation to voluntarily submit himself to the jurisdiction. He may stay out of court and allow the moving party and purchasers under the sale to proceed at their peril. The record is always available to a purchaser, and, in the absence of any affirmative act by the heir tending to mislead the purchaser, he is not chargeable with constructive fraud merely because he does not seek out such purchaser and warn him of defects in the proceedings. The heirs and widow in this case did nothing to mislead the plaintiff and his copurchaser. They simply declined to appear, and the purchasers, without examining the record, bought the property. It is true that they paid full price for it, and, no doubt, thought the sale valid, but this fact can make no difference as to the validity of the sale").

[h] Sale of widow's share.—(1) The court is without authority to sell the widow's share, an order for such sale is void, and the widow is not estopped from asserting her title by accepting a part of the proceeds of the sale as a portion of her distributive share of the estate. "We have every reason to infer that the heirs received due notice of

of the sale.[76] Distribution of the purchase money to persons under disability does not estop them unless such distribution is ratified upon removal of the disability,[77] and it has been held that even the receipt of money and expression of satisfaction at the sale after reaching majority will not estop one who was an infant when the sale was made.[78] Estoppel has also been held to arise from bringing suit for the purchase money[79] and recovering judgment therefor.[80]

[§ 1651] (3) Retention of Property Purchased. The purchaser cannot, while he retains possession of the property, resist payment of the purchase money, or otherwise repudiate the burdens arising from the purchase because of defects in the sale or proceedings leading up thereto.[81]

[§ 1652] (4) Ratification. Heirs of full age may bind themselves by an express ratification of an irregular sale, and will not be thereafter heard to question its validity,[82] but persons under disability cannot ratify.[83] If in a bill to avoid a voidable sale and for other purposes plaintiff amends by striking out the prayer to set aside the sale, he thereby affirms the sale.[84]

the tableau of distribution, which included the price of the property now claimed by the heirs. If they knew (we infer that they knew) that part of the amount distributed, as made to appear by the tableau homologated, was the proceeds of this sale, they have scant ground upon which to stand to recover judgment." void [89] as well as to those which are merely irregular and voidable;[90] but other statutes limiting the time for attacking administration sales have been regarded inapplicable to void sales.[91] A statute barring attacks on sales already made in two years from the passage of the act has been held good,[92] and it has even been held that a statute expressed in general terms applies to sales already made, at least where time remains after the passage of the act to commence the action.[93] As to the time when the statutes of limitation begin to run the rules in the several states vary.[94] The running of the statute is not usually prevented by the fact that the administration has not been closed,[95] or that dower has not been assigned to the widow, when she is not in possession;[96] neither will ignorance of the facts suspend the statute when there was no concealment and the facts were readily ascertainable,[97] unless the failure to discover the facts is satisfactorily explained,[98] or unless fraud is relied on, in which case the time runs from the discovery of the fraud.[99]

[§ 1654] b. Effect of Laches. Apart from any statute limiting the time within which proceedings to set aside a sale must be instituted, the rule is that such proceedings must be brought within a reasonable time, to be determined by the facts of each particular case.[1] Accordingly one may lose

[a] In California Code Civ. Proc. § 1573 provides that an action for the recovery of real estate sold by the administrator must be commenced within three years after the settlement of his final account, and it is held that the statute commences to run at the expiration of a reasonable time for obtaining a settlement after the estate is in condition to be closed. "The proceeding of administration by his own laches the right to attach a sale, as by remaining silent until the rights of third persons have intervened,[2] until the rights of creditors have been lost by lapse of time,[3] or until the purchaser has made valuable improvements on the land.[4] So also one may be estopped by remaining silent for a long time and receiving benefits from the sale,[5] and it has been held that, although it was improper for the probate court to order a sale of a homestead without protecting the interest of minor children, the sale would not be set aside at the suit of the children commenced after they had reached their majority, and after their homestead rights had ceased.[6]

was in the nature of a proceeding in rem, and in a sense the appellants were parties thereto. Everything they now complain of appeared upon the public records. There was no fraud, no deception, no concealment, nor were the matters of which complaint is made of such a character that they would ordinarily remain secret. Under these circumstances it is a misapplication of terms to say that the grounds of action were discovered years after they arose and appeared upon the records of the court. Discovery as employed in a statute or equitable rule of limitations and knowledge are not convertible terms, nor does the former mean the result of a resort at leisure to known sources of information. The possession of the means of knowledge is equivalent to knowledge itself. A party who has the opportunity of knowing the facts of which he complains cannot avail himself of his inactivity, and thus escape the imputation of laches. The grounds of attack against the validity of the orders of sale and the executor's deeds were matters of record. They had notice of the pendency of the administration proceedings sufficient to excite their attention and to put them on guard as to the course thereof. Under these circumstances they must be deemed to have had actual knowledge of what the records showed." Williamson v. Beardsley, 137 Fed. (U. S.) 467, 470, 69 CCA 615.

Lundy, 141 Ga. 387, 81 SE 129 (seven years sufficient as to persons sui juris during the entire period, but not as to infants who sued within seven years after attaining majority). (5) Thirteen years. Fuller v. Little, 59 Ga. 338; Geyer v. Snyder, 69 Hun 115, 23 NYS 200 [aff 140 N. Y. 394, 35 NE 784]. Williamson v. Beardsley, 137 Fed. 467, 69 CCA 615 (attack by nonresidents). (7) Nineteen years. Goodbody v. Goodbody, 95 Ill. 456. (8) Twenty years. Stobaugh v. (16) Nearly thirty-two years. Griffin v. Caldwell, 72 Ark. 451, 81 SW 611.

[b] Delay not sufficient to defeat right.—(1) A delay of six years is not unreasonable, where some of the heirs were nonresidents, some were invalids, and the others minors, and the facts were not discovered until a few days before the suit was commenced. Ingalls v. Rowell, 149 Ill. 163, 36 NE 1016. [b] Where no notice was given an attaching creditor of an heir's interest in the land of his ancestor of a proceeding by the latter's administrator to sell the land to pay debts, such creditor was entitled to attack the administrator's sale collaterally in a suit to subject the land to the creditor's judgment. Mullin v. White, 134 Iowa 681, 112 NW 164.

[c] A defect of jurisdiction apparent on the face of the record will sustain an action to vacate the proceedings. Guy v. Pierson, 21 Ind. 18.

[d] Whenever the records of a probate court are silent or wanting in material particulars as to the essentials of a valid sale of real estate, the same may be attacked in a collateral action. Cater v. Steeves, 95 Minn. 225, 103 NW 885.

[e] A purchaser claiming under a conveyance by an heir is not estopped

If, however, the jurisdiction of the court has properly attached, the order of sale is not void, whatever may be the errors and irregularities in the proceedings,[9] and the general rule is that there can be no collateral attack on such an order except for want of jurisdiction.[10] Furthermore it has been from denying the validity of a subsequent sale of lands of the decedent in proceedings void for want of jurisdiction. Rucker v. Tennessee Coal, etc., Co., 176 Ala. 456, 58 S 465.

[f] Requisites of petition.—In a collateral attack on a county court judgment and administrator's sale thereunder, the petition should state not only that plaintiff was not served with notice, but also that the judgment record does not show such service. Shane v. Peoples, 25 N. D. 188, 141 NW 737.

[g] Fraud.—Even where fraud is alleged in the presentation of an administrator's petition to sell land, a sale thereunder will not be set aside on collateral attack without an allegation and proof that the purchaser at such sale was a party to the fraud. Shane v. Peoples, 25 N. D. 188, 141 NW 737.

"It appears from the record that the County Court of Austin County had jurisdiction to grant the letters of administration to De Cordova and also to order the sale of the land. Such orders of the county court are not subject to collateral attack." Holland v. Nance, 102 Tex. 177, 185, 114 SW 346 [rev (Civ. A.) 107 SW 102]. To same effect Crawford v. McDonald, 88 Tex. 626, 33 SW 325; Martin v. Robinson, 67 Tex. 368, 3 SW 550.

[a] Requisites to jurisdiction.—(1) The sole requisite to establish jurisdiction and protect an order of sale from collateral attack is the presenting of a petition setting forth a statutory ground for the sale. Friedman v. Shamblin, 117 Ala. 454, 23 S 821; De Bardelaben v. Stoudenmire, 48 Ala. 643; Watson v. Collins, 37 Ala. 587; Doe v. Riley, 28 Ala. 164, 65 AmD 334; Perkins v. Winter, 7 Ala. 855. (2) Where, however, minors are interested, there must be proof of the necessity of the sale by deposition, as in chancery proceedings. Thompson v. Boswell, 97 Ala. 570, 12 S 809. (3) But the want of such proof has been held to be a mere irregularity. Field v. Goldsby, 28 Ala. 218, 65 AmD 341. (4) Incompetency of the witnesses so examined cannot be proved to defeat the sale if the order of sale contains a recital of proper proof. Kent v. Mansel, 101 Ala. 334, 14 S 489.

[b] The existence of an actual unpaid probated indebtedness gives the probate court jurisdiction to sell lands, and pass a title which will be valid as against collateral attack. Washington v. Govan, 73 Ark. 612, 84 SW 792.

[c] Where a tract of land has lost its homestead character, and becomes a part of the assets of the deceased owner's estate, the heirs of the owner cannot attack in a collateral action the proceedings for the sale thereof for the payment of debts. Dignowity v. Baumblatt, 38 Tex. Civ. A. 363, 85 SW 834.

[d] Irregularities not rendering sale void.—(1) Failure to make an heir a party. Haynes v. Simpson, 143 Ala. 554, 39 S 352. (2) That the sale was not for a purpose authorized by law. Wilkin v. Simmons, (Tex. Civ. A.) 151 SW 1145. Kelley v. Laconia Levee Dist., 74 Ark. 202, 85 SW 249, 87 SW 638. (4) The fact that ten years elapsed during which no order was made by a probate court in the administration of a decedent's estate before the order of sale. Boslet v. Thomas, 35 Tex. Civ. A. 144, 80 SW 115. (5) The lack of proof of an entry in the record books of the probate court of an order of sale, if there is some paper filed in such court indicating that the sale has been approved. Cruse v. considered that jurisdiction will be conclusively presumed unless the record itself negatives its existence.[11] A stranger to the title may raise no objection not going to the jurisdiction,[12] as the title of the purchaser can be affected by no other defect.[13] The sale itself is likewise protected from collateral attack unless the proceedings are void, either for want of jurisdiction or from a failure to comply with some statutory provision expressly made essential to the validity of the sale.[14] Thus, where an order confirming a sale of real estate to pay debts recites that the sale was legally made and fairly conducted, it must be presumed on collateral attack that the probate court had before it proof showing that the provisions of the statute, including the requirement of the publication of the notice in the proper county, had been complied with.[15] And it seems that a sale cannot be collaterally attacked because not made by the person licensed to make it, the confirmation curing the defect, at least where the sale was under color of authority.[16]

[a] The sale itself vests title and no advantage can be taken collaterally of any defect in the deed. Sturdy v. Jacoway, 19 Ark. 499.

[b] Where the sale has been confirmed and the purchaser has paid the price, gone into possession, and made improvements, it cannot be collaterally attacked. Johnson v. Cooper, 56 Miss. 608.

[c] A failure to enter the confirmation on the minutes will not open the sale to collateral attack when an indorsement of confirmation appears on the return. Moody v. Butler, 63 Tex. 210.

[d] A recital in the record of payment of the purchase price cannot be contradicted. May v. Marks, 74 Ala. 249.

[e] The using of different baptismal names in different parts of the record will not avoid the sale when it is plain that the same person was intended. Webb v. Sellers, 27 Tex. 423.

[g] Conveyance to representative by purchaser.—The fact that on the day an administrator sold land belonging to the estate the purchaser reconveyed it to the administrator in his individual capacity is insufficient to vacate the sale in a collateral proceeding, although it is competent to explain the absence of an order confirming the sale. [h] Sale subject to homestead right.—The sale of all of several lots, subject to the widow's homestead rights, when only one of the lots is subject thereto, is an irregularity which does not invalidate the sale on a collateral attack. Brown v. Hannah, 152 Mich. 33, 115 NW 980.

[i] The fact that the deed recites a cash consideration will not subject the sale to collateral attack, although the statute when in force required all sales of land to be on credit. Berryman v. McDonald, 49 Tex. Civ. A. 81, 107 SW 944.

[j] A sale of government land to which the decedent had an equitable title, but to which he had not yet received a patent, to pay decedent's debts, could not be attacked in a collateral action to quiet title, on the ground that the probate court improperly ordered it sold. Doran v. Kennedy, 122 Minn. 1, 141 NW 851.

[k] Sale of property not belonging to estate.—An order directing the administration of the estate of one person does not authorize the sale of property of another decedent, and such a sale is void. Woodyard v. Threlkeld, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 10.

even bills in equity to set aside a sale have been said to be collateral attacks,[18] or to amount to collateral attacks so far as the purchaser is concerned.[19] A cross bill attacking the sale in a suit to quiet title to the land is a collateral attack,[20] and a bill to impress the land with a trust involves a collateral attack which cannot be sustained where jurisdiction existed.[21] So also an attempt to have an administrator's sale and the decree authorizing and ratifying it declared void is a collateral attack upon such sale and decree,[22] even though made in the form of an action to quiet title.[23] But where plaintiff in an action to quiet title claims under an administration sale, a claim of defendant that the land sold was not that described in plaintiff's complaint is not a collateral attack on the order of sale.[24]

[§ 1657] 5. Grounds for Annulling Sales[25]—a. In General. Where a statute specifies the grounds on which a sale of the property under order of court may be avoided, such a sale can be attacked only on the statutory grounds.[26] The pendency of litigation in regard to the title of land of a decedent and the issuance of a devisavit vel non do not constitute ground for setting aside a judgment of sale, and sale thereunder,[27] but can only be considered in a separate action attacking the sale for fraud by showing that the purchaser was cognizant of the facts and took some unfair advantage of them.[28]

[§ 1658] b. Want of Authority of Executor or Administrator—(1) Defective Appointment. Where one is recognized as executor or administrator by the court and licensed to make a sale, the general rule is that the regularity of his appointment cannot be questioned in another proceeding, this rule being based to a certain extent upon the ground that the granting of the license to sell includes an adjudication of the authority of the person applying as representative for the license.[29] There is, however, authority for the view that if the representative was not lawfully appointed the sale is void,[30] and it has also been held that if the record of the probate proceedings does not on its face show facts authorizing a grant of administration, the letters are absolutely void, and so is a sale made in the course of such void administration.[31] The same result follows when the court has granted administration to a person incompetent to be appointed,[32] and also where the sale is made by one who has not qualified, although appointed.[33] Heirs may collaterally attack a sale made by an administrator fraudulently appointed when the purchaser was a party to or had notice of the fraud.[34]

[c] Failure to show residence of decedent or presentation of claims.—Where the record failed to show whether decedent was a resident of the county or had property there, or whether any claim against the estate was presented, the sale was held good against collateral attack. is void,[35] and the termination of the authority of the executor or administrator would seem on the same principle to render invalid any subsequent sale made by him,[36] yet it has been held that a sale made while he is still acting and recognized as representative cannot be impeached, at least collaterally.[37]

[§ 1660] c. Defects in Proceedings Prior to Order—(1) As to Jurisdiction. Where a lack of jurisdiction in the court to order a sale of real estate to pay debts appears, the sale can be attacked in an action brought for that purpose.[38]

[§ 1661] (2) As to Parties. It has been held that the failure to name the heirs or others interested as parties in the proceedings for the sale, while it may constitute an irregularity, does not render the order void,[39] and a fortiori a purchaser is not entitled to avoid his purchase for failure to join as parties persons whose claim of title is barred by the statute of limitations.[40] While infant heirs should be represented by a guardian ad litem, a defect in the proceedings in this respect has been held not to defeat the jurisdiction,[41] but there is also authority for the contrary view.[42] It has also been held that a judgment ordering the sale of lands to pay his debts was invalid where it was rendered in a suit in which decedent's children were represented by a guardian ad litem whose appointment was void, because of failure to summon the infants or some of them,[43] and that a sale was void as to an infant where a guardian ad litem was appointed but never accepted or acted, the clerk of the court signing in his name, without his knowledge, an acceptance of service of the citation.[44] A sale may be set aside because heirs of decedent were not made parties,[45] and those who were not parties, who never had a day in court, and whose rights were injured, may collaterally assail a decree of sale for fraud.[46]

[§ 1662] (3) As to Notice of Application. The necessity of the service of citation, summons, or other form of notice on heirs and others interested in the estate in order to confer jurisdiction depends upon the legislation of the state in which the proceedings are had, and the rulings vary, it being held in some states that a failure to comply with a statute requiring and regulating notice renders the sale void and open to collateral attack,[47] while in others it is held that in a collateral proceeding there can be no inquiry as to whether any notice or sufficient notice was given.[48] It has even been held that a lack of notice of the application will not warrant setting aside the sale in direct proceedings for that purpose, unless it is shown that actual fraud was committed,[49] or there is some other ground of acknowledged equity jurisdiction.[50] A recital in the record of due service cannot be impeached in another proceeding,[51] unless falsified by the record itself.[52] According to some authorities an affirmative showing by the record as to notice is necessary to the validity of the sale;[53] but it has also been held that if the record is silent as to notice, regularity will be presumed.[54]

[§ 1663] (4) As to Petition.[55] It has been held that the sale is void if the petition does not state all facts essential to the jurisdiction;[56] but, as a general rule, when the court has acted on the petition and ordered the sale, the petition will be liberally construed in an attack on the sale itself, and sustained in spite of informalities or statements merely defective.[57]

Improper Order—(1) Want of Sufficient Cause. A purchaser is not bound to inquire as to the truth of the allegations upon which the order to sell was granted.[58] The order is a judgment that the circumstances existed rendering a sale necessary,[59] and no collateral attack can be based on the ground that there was in fact no such necessity.[60] The rule excludes collateral inquiry as to the existence of debts,[61] the exhaustion of personalty,[62] or the necessity of selling as much land as was ordered sold.[63] It is even held that, where the court might under some circumstances exercise jurisdiction over particular land, a sale cannot be collaterally attacked because the land ordered sold was not subject to sale to satisfy the debts.[64] Where the order purports to have been made on a statutory ground it may not be attacked as being in fact based upon some other ground not authorized by statute.[65]

[§ 1665] (2) Errors or Irregularities. Errors or irregularities in the order or decree of sale do not render the sale void or open to collateral attack.[66]

[§ 1666] e. Defects in Proceedings after Order—(1) Representative's Oath and Bond. Statutes are generally mandatory, and a failure to comply with them is fatal on collateral attack, in so far as they require an executor or administrator about to make a sale to take a special oath[67] or give bond to account for the proceeds,[68] although it has been held otherwise with respect to failure to give a bond where the proceeds of the sale have been actually and properly distributed.[69]

Order dispensing with bond. A sale has been held void for want of a bond, although the order excused the executor from giving a bond.[70] Under a statute permitting a collateral attack where the administrator did not give a bond "in case a bond was required upon granting the license," it has been held that the requirement referred to was that of the license and not of the law, and that the sale was valid without a bond, where the license required none, although it should have required one.[71]

[§ 1667] (2) Notice of Sale. The failure to give proper notice of the time and place of sale is generally a mere irregularity which is not cognizable collaterally,[72] the adjudication of the probate court being conclusive.[73] But it has been held that the facts that the advertisement did not specify clearly the inherent quality of the property, and that it sold at a low price can be considered in ascertaining whether the sale was bona fide.[74]

[§ 1668] (3) Sale and Report. As a general rule irregularity in conducting the sale itself or in the subsequent proceedings do not render the sale void or subject to collateral attack.[75] Thus the sale is not void because several parcels are sold in bulk under one bid,[76] or because an affidavit required by law of the administrator that he was not the purchaser was not made within the time required by law;[77] nor will a sale be set aside because the auctioneer cried a bid for the purchaser,[78] because the property was conveyed to a creditor in satisfaction of his claim,[79] or because the sale was made for cash whereas the law required a sale on credit.[80] It has been held, however, that, where a sale was made on credit, but was falsely reported to the court as having been made for cash, it might be set aside on direct attack.[81] If there was an actual public sale, it cannot be avoided because of an unauthorized contract to sell to the purchaser at the price which he afterward bid.[82]

Errors in the report of sale which work no injury will not justify setting it aside.[83]

Lack of notice of confirmation. A sale for more than sufficient to pay all the debts should not be set aside, after it has been absolutely confirmed, on the petition of a creditor who does not allege that he was prejudiced thereby, simply because such creditor had no notice of the confirmation of the same.[84]

Sale of land not included in order. The representative is absolutely without authority to sell any land not included within the terms of the order, and such a sale will be set aside.[85] And it has been held that, where the order directs the sale of two tracts separately, the smaller one first, and it turns out that the sale of the smaller one was void, the subsequent sale of the larger must be set aside as unauthorized.[86]

[§ 1669] f. Default of Purchaser. It has been held that a sale may be set aside because of failure of the purchaser to comply with his bid;[87] but there is also authority for the view that nonpayment of the purchase money does not render the sale void so as to be subject to collateral attack.[88]

but inadequacy of price is a circumstance to be considered when other grounds are alleged as bearing upon the fairness of the sale;[92] and it has been considered that, where the inadequacy of price is so gross as to amount to fraud, the sale may be set aside even after the title has passed.[93] A sale is void where it was made in violation of a statutory prohibition of a sale at first offering for less than a certain proportion of the appraised value.[94]

[§ 1671] h. Fraud. Fraud in the sale renders it voidable but not absolutely void,[95] and it is usually held that in a collateral proceeding, such as ejectment by the heirs, such fraud cannot be shown, but that a bill in equity or other proceeding having the direct object of setting aside the sale must be resorted to,[96] it being well established that a court of equity may set aside such a sale for fraud.[97] Where the facts were known and appeared in the confirmation proceedings the judgment of confirmation estops one there represented from making a subsequent attack,[98] but a confirmed sale will be set aside where the parties injured by fraud proceed promptly after obtaining information of the facts.[99] Charges of fraud must be clear and distinct.[1] Fraud in the sale will not be presumed [2] or inferred from slight or indecisive circumstances.[3] The courts will,

[a] "A misconception of power or authority, unaccompanied by corrupt or improper motive, is not fraud. When the executor applied for the orders of sale of the property he stated the condition of the estate and his previous conduct of its affairs truthfully and in most commendable detail. Everything that he did was reported to and met with the judicial sanction of the state court in which the estate was being administered; and upon the showing which he made—and it is not claimed that it was false in fact—the court ordered the property to be sold. The sales were made, reported to, and confirmed by the court, and the deeds were duly executed. If it were true that the sales were irregular or even void, it does not follow that the executor was guilty of fraud." Williamson v. Beardsley, 137 Fed. 467, 469, 69 CCA 615.

[b] The test of fraud is conditions and values at the time when

however, interfere where the sale, although nominally to pay debts, was designed merely to divest the title of the heirs,[4] or where there was a scheme to buy in the land at an inadequate price,[5] or to use any artifice or device to prevent competition in the bidding.[6] It is a constructive fraud, warranting the setting aside of the sale, for the representative to obtain an order to sell land to pay debts on the ground of insufficiency of personalty while he holds notes which he claims as his own but which belong to the estate.[7] But it is not fraudulent for the administrator to agree to sell the property for a certain sum in case no greater sum should be bid at the sale,[8] although it would be fraudulent to agree to sell at a fixed price without regard to the amount of the bid.[9] A sale for the payment of debts is not rendered fraudulent or invalidated by the fact that the purchaser bought the land for the purpose of perfecting his title under a conveyance from the widow.[10] One who is induced to purchase city lots from an administrator by the latter's false representation as to the width of the streets on which the lots front is entitled to a rescission of the sale without proof of actual damages.[11] One cannot complain unless his interests are injuriously affected.[12]

Participation by the purchaser in the fraud of the executor or administrator making the sale, or notice of such fraud at the time of his purchase, has been held to be necessary to authorize setting aside the sale,[13] but there is also authority for the view that fraud on the part of the representative is sufficient, even though the purchaser was ignorant thereof.[14]

[§ 1672] i. Mistake.[15] The ordinary principles of equity apply where it is sought to set aside a sale for mistake.[16] The purchaser may be relieved where an excusable mistake of fact caused him to purchase,[17] but a sale will not be set aside for mistake except at the instance of one injuriously affected.[18]

Murphy v. De France, 105 Mo. 53, 15 SW 949, 16 SW 861. (2) The case of an attempt to prevent intending purchasers from bidding is distinguishable from a case where several persons desiring to obtain distinct portions of a tract of land about to be sold at auction agree that one of their number shall bid for the benefit of all, and in case he succeeds in making the purchase, shall divide the land according to their agreement. It is also distinguishable from those cases where one is deputed to bid as the agent of another, with specific directions as to how and how much he shall bid. Arrangements of this kind, entered into before the sale, are held to promote rather than stifle competition. Ingalls v. Rowell, 149 Ill. 163, 36 NE 1016.

of decedent's property is special and ceases with the order of confirmation, so that thereafter the court granting a license has no power, by virtue of its jurisdiction previously existing, to revise its proceedings, and set the sale aside,[20] at least after the expiration of the term at which the order of confirmation was made.[21] Exceptions to this rule have, however, been asserted in cases where the purchasers did not pay the purchase money[22] or the representative was himself the purchaser and the circumstances were such as to afford grounds for a suspicion of fraud,[23] as also in cases of want of jurisdiction, fraud, or mistake,[24] or generally where the sale was absolutely void as distinguished from voidable.[25] After the jurisdiction of the probate court ceases, a bill in equity, or in the code states an action in the nature thereof, will lie, and is necessary in order to vacate a voidable sale.[26] The necessity of bringing in new parties may also require resort to such an independent proceeding.[27] Equity will also take jurisdiction under proper allegations to impress a trust on the property in the hands of the purchaser, without directly attacking his legal title,[28] or when, because of there being no law requiring confirmation, no opportunity was afforded to test the validity of the sale at law.[29] Where equity has taken over the administration of an estate on a bill filed for that purpose it will on supplemental bill set aside a sale made under order of the orphans' court after such transfer of the administration.[30] If the sale is absolutely void persons interested may so treat it, and courts of law will disregard it, so that generally no equitable relief is required and none will be given against void sales.[31] A defective sale may sometimes be in effect avoided by defending proceedings brought by the purchaser to confirm his title.[32] The purchaser at a voidable sale may maintain a bill to

But to this general rule there are exceptions. On the one hand, the rights of innocent third parties may intervene in such a way that no relief can be given even if the term has not passed; while, on the other hand, the judgment entered may, for want of jurisdiction, or by reason of fraud, mistake, or misapprehension, be vacated or amended, although the term has passed").

If the judgment is not void on its face, and both parties were living at its rendition, the court cannot at a subsequent term vacate or alter it. The correction of clerical misprisions is then the extent of its authority").

"Courts of law have no power to set aside a sale because the administrator was interested in the purchase. This is for the reason that the sale is not void, but merely voidable at the election of the beneficial owners of the estate; and if they seek to set it aside, they must observe the maxim of 'he who seeks equity must do equity.' The doctrine of granting relief upon terms or conditions imposed is not known at law, but is purely a creature of equity." Crawford County Bank v. Bolton, 87 Ark. 142, 147, 112 SW 398.

[d] In Louisiana (1) it seems that a direct action in a court of ordinary jurisdiction is always necessary. Anger's Succ., 38 La. Ann. 492; Fields v. Gagne, 31 La. Ann. 182; Violett v. Fairchild, 6 La. Ann. 193. (2) But such a court cannot set aside a sale because of the invalidity of the administrator's appointment. The court of probate must first remove the administrator. McCombs v. Dunbar, 3 La. 517. (3) The order of sale and proceedings leading thereto must be attacked in the court ordering the sale, but subsequent proceedings may be brought in the court of the administrator's domicile. Woods v. Woods, 13 La. Ann. 189.

[e] In Nebraska, where the license to sell is obtained in a court of general jurisdiction at law and in equity, it has been said that the proper remedy after confirmation is by petition in the original proceedings, and the petition must be positively verified. [a] Demurring to a bill by the purchasers to restrain an action at law and reform their deed is not an election to disaffirm a sale to the administrators and does not present for adjudication the right of the heirs to vacate such sale. Thorp v. McCullum, 6 Ill. 614.

compel the heir to elect whether he will ratify or disaffirm.[33]

[§ 1674] b. Parties. In a suit to set aside an executor's or administrator's sale the principles of equity control as to the parties.[34] The heirs or devisees must be made parties,[35] as must also the executor or administrator[36] and all other parties to the sale.[37] The purchaser must be brought in as a party[38] and all who have since acquired interests in the property should also be made parties.[39] Those also must be brought in whose rights would be affected by a determination of the matters involved.[40] Creditors are not generally necessary parties[41] but a creditor who instituted the proceedings leading to the sale must be made a party to a bill to set it aside.[42] Where the administrator indirectly purchased, neither his creditors, not his assignee for creditors, are proper parties,[43] nor is the person through whom the representative effected his purchase a necessary party.[44] On an objection to the issuance of a deed to a purchaser, on the ground that the purchaser had agreed to take title in the name of his mother for the benefit of her minor grandchildren, it is not necessary that the mother is made a party.[45]

[§ 1675] c. Notice. The purchaser is entitled to notice of a proceeding to set aside the sale,[46] and it has been held that a creditor of decedent has such an interest in a decree confirming a sale that he is entitled to notice of and an opportunity to be heard on the administrator's application to vacate it.[47]

[§ 1676] d. Pleadings. The pleadings in a proceeding to set aside a sale must have the substantial requisites of equity pleadings.[48] The bill, petition, or complaint must specify the defects relied on,[49] and its allegations must be positive and direct,[50] and must be of specific facts, not general conclusions.[51] The extent of plaintiff's interest must be stated with certainty,[52] and plaintiff must, when necessary in order to disclose an unquestionable right, plead exceptions and negative facts.[53]

Tex.—Smart v. Panther, 42 Tex. Civ. A. 262, 95 SW 679.

[a] Insufficient allegations.— (1) An allegation that plaintiff caused search to be made in the office of the probate court and no record or any evidence could be found that the administrator had ever applied to said court for the sale of the lands is not an averment that no order of sale had been made. Garrett v. Lynch, 45 Ala. 204. (2) In a suit brought before confirmation an allegation that the purchasers intended to make no payment other than a credit on the claim to satisfy which the sale was made is insufficient to show that the sale was not for cash, as the court will not presume that the administrator will violate the law or the probate court confirm an illegal purchase. Deans v. Wilcoxon, 25 Fla. 980, 7 S 163. (3) Where all the heirs made quitclaim deeds covering their respective interests in the real estate, to a purchaser from the administrators, and one of them sought to cancel the entire transaction and compel the property to be redelivered to the administrator, the allegation of the existence of some debts is too vague and indefinite to affect the question, and the case made is that of a single heir, who desires to set aside a sale and have the whole property returned to the administrators substantially for the benefit of all the heirs, in spite of the fact that they appear to have made quitclaim deeds of their interest, and not to desire a restoration. Anderson v. Goodwin, 125 Ga. 663, 54 SE 679. (4) Under a statute requiring the administration to be "in the county where decedent resided if he had a fixed domicile or residence in the republic," a bill attacking a sale on the ground that the administration in R county was without jurisdiction and alleging that the last place of residence of the deceased was in L county, where he resided at the time of his death, was bad for not alleging that L county was his permanent or fixed residence or that he had a fixed domicile or residence in the republic. George v. Watson, 19 Tex. 354.

[b] Complaints held sufficient.— (1) A complaint which alleges that the sale was made pursuant to the county court's decree, that the administrator executed his deed for the property, and that several years elapsed between the time of the sale and the bringing of the suit, sufficiently alleges the final disposition of the matter of the sale in the county court, where the statute requires that a report of the sale shall be made at the term of court next succeeding the sale, and that a conveyance shall not be made until after the sale is approved. Ryan v. Geigel, 39 Colo. 355, 89 P 775. (2) A petition alleging that the judgment of sale was procured by the administrator for his benefit on consent of the petitioners obtained by fraudulently representing to them that the sale was for their benefit, and that the administrator thereby secured lands of the estate for a nominal sum, states a good cause of action. Harrod v. Harrod, 167 Ky. 308, 180 SW 797.

[a] Showing what record discloses.—Where the recitals of the record as to service of process are conclusive, a complaint seeking to set aside a sale for want of service must allege not merely that there was no service, but what the record discloses as to service. Park, 101 Ky. 1, 39 SW 493, 19 KyL 179. (2) Plaintiff must show that he is within an exception to a statute of limitations which the bill would show to be otherwise applicable. Back v. Combs, 96 Ky. 522, 29 SW 852, 16 KyL 613. (3) A plaintiff claiming the land as an exempt homestead must negative the exceptions in the statute creating

A bill to set aside a sale for fraud must charge the purchaser with notice of the fraud.[54] In the absence of a special exception attacking the sufficiency of the petition to set aside a sale on the ground that facts were pleaded showing that the running of the statute of limitations had not been suspended during its apparent operation, a general allegation in the petition that the claims for the payment of which the land was sold were barred, is sufficient to admit proof of such fact.[55] There should in general be an offer in pleading to restore the purchase money.[56]

[§ 1677] e. Evidence—(1) Presumptions and Burden of Proof—(a) As to Jurisdiction, Etc. The presumptions are strongly in favor of the validity of sales. It is often held that jurisdiction will be presumed from the fact that the court made the order,[57] but in some states it is held that on a collateral attack one claiming under the sale must show affirmatively the jurisdictional facts.[58] A finding or recital in the record is sufficient to raise a presumption of jurisdiction,[59] but no presumption of jurisdiction can be indulged if the record affirmatively discloses facts contrary thereto.[60] Not only jurisdiction but the fact that proceedings were had and a license granted will be presumed if the deed so recites and there has been long possession thereunder.[61] Indeed long and undisturbed possession alone creates a presumption of the validity of the sale,[62] and the legal inference from an allegation that property was sold more than forty years ago, in a succession, is that it was sold to pay debts.[63] No presumption will be indulged contrary to the record in order to sustain a sale, as by presuming that it was in fact made under an execution or a power in the will when the record discloses that it was made under an order of court and was void thereunder.[64] If, however, the property was personalty and might have been sold without an order, the sale is not invalidated because an order was obtained.[65]

[§ 1678] (b) As to Regularity of Proceedings. The existence and regularity of steps in the proceedings, not jurisdictional, but sometimes essential to perfect title in the purchaser, will almost uniformly be presumed where the record is merely silent,[66] and especially is this true where the rec-

the exemption. Dickens v. Long, 109 N. C. 165, 13 SE 841.

[b] Accuracy of description of lands.—On a suit to set aside a sale the description of the lands in the order of sale must be presumed to have exemplified what was intended, in the absence of an allegation to the contrary. ords are in whole or in part lost.[67] So a record defective in some particular may be aided by a finding, recital, or allegation in another part from which the court will presume the existence of the missing element.[68] But where the record discloses an insufficient order of confirmation, the existence of another and sufficient order will not be presumed.[69] The general rule that persons acting in an official capacity are presumed to have properly performed their duties[70] applies to administration sales.[71] A prima facie case is made by the purchaser by production of an order of sale, order of confirmation, and deed; all other steps will be presumed,[72] and the burden is then on the party impeaching the sale to show that it was not made legally.[73] One who seeks to set aside the sale for fraud has the burden of proving his contention.[74] A sale to the administratrix's mother and a reconveyance to the administratrix the same day create a prima facie, but not a conclusive, presumption of fraud in an action to set aside the sale.[75]

[§ 1679] (2) Admissibility. The construction of the order of sale must be determined by the court from an inspection of the record itself,[76] but parol evidence, based on data in the deed, may be received to identify the land conveyed.[77] Where the statute protects a sale from attack if certain conditions are complied with, and the price "duly accounted for," the account can be shown only by the probate records.[78] Where fraud is charged, parol evidence may be received to contradict the official appraisement as to the value of the property,[79] and parties to the deed may testify to facts in support of the charge of fraud, although they contradict recitals in the deed.[80] Where certain of the heirs residing in the county testified that they had never been served with notice of the application to sell, defendant, to rebut such testimony, was entitled to prove by the sheriff the contents, in substance, of the process served by him, after showing diligent and unavailing search for the papers showing a return of service of notices by him on all plaintiffs or their representatives who lived in the county.[81]

[§ 1680] (3) Weight and Sufficiency. Evidence in support of allegations invalidating the sale must be clear and strong;[82] but slight evidence, especially after a long lapse of time ac-

[b] Notice.—On collateral attack on an executor's sale where the executor failed to file a report of the sale as required by statute, before the first day of the term of court next succeeding the sale, and there was sufficient time between filing the report and confirmation of the sale for notice to be given to the parties in interest, it will be presumed that such notice was given. companied by possession of the purchaser or those claiming under him, may be sufficient to sustain the sale.[83] After the lapse of years recitals of jurisdictional facts in the deed are prima facie evidence thereof,[84] but recitals giving reasons why the property sold for so little create suspicion as to the fairness of the sale.[85] Reference is made in the note to a number of cases in which the courts have passed upon the sufficiency of evidence adduced in support or contravention of particular contentions.[86]

[§ 1681] f. Trial or Hearing. There should be a hearing on the issues raised by the pleadings,[87] and where a jury trial is had the instructions must correctly advise them as to the governing principles and their duties.[88]

[§ 1682] g. Decree; Relief Granted. It is proper to set aside the sale where the court is not satisfied that it was made fairly and in conformity to law.[89] If another court has exclusive jurisdiction to license sales, a court of equity may on avoiding a sale decree possession and remove all obstacles to a resale, but it cannot itself order one.[90] A new license may be obtained if necessary,[91] but if the defect was in the sale alone the license should not be vacated and a new license is unnecessary.[92] Under some circumstances the defect can be cured only by a resale;[93] and it has been considered that the sale should not be set aside when a resale is impractical and the price realized at the original sale was adequate.[94] In the case of sales by administrators to themselves the proper course has sometimes been declared to be to order a resale, and if on such resale more is not bid than was paid by the administrator on the first sale, then to confirm the first,[95] although it has also been held that under such circumstances the sale should not be set aside, but the purchaser should be declared a trustee for the heirs or devisees.[96] Where land was sold in parcels to different purchasers, under an alleged irregular judgment, the sale cannot be set aside as to one parcel at the instance of certain of the heirs, and not as to the others.[97] It has been held that if proceedings in the county court to sell were void on account of the administrator's fraud, of which subsequent purchasers had knowledge, the district court could only declare such purchasers constructive trustees and compel a reconveyance, and could not set aside the county court proceedings and conveyances thereunder.[98] The effect of a decree annulling an administrator's sale is to revest title in the heirs or devisees, subject as before to administration.[99] Children of a decedent entitled to homestead rights cannot in an equitable action brought by them to set aside a sale of the land to pay debts claim damages on the ground that their mother deprived them of the use of the homestead, where that fact does not appear on the face of the record of the probate proceedings for the sale.[1] A refusal to set aside the sale is proper, although the proceedings were voidable, where the purchaser was entitled, in equity, to the property, and could have compelled plaintiff's ancestor, if alive, to deed the property to him.[2]

[§ 1683] 7. Settlement with Purchaser When Sale Avoided[3]—a. Reimbursement for Purchase Money—(1) Right of Purchaser. The general rule is that when an administration sale is set aside at the instance of an heir, the purchaser is entitled to a return of the purchase money paid by him and used for the payment of decedent's debts or distributed among those entitled to the land,[4] even though the sale was absolutely void.[5] But, except to the extent that the money was so used, the purchaser has no equity against the heirs for reimbursement.[6] It has been held that no equity for repayment arises in favor of one who purchases mala fides,[7] but other courts have considered that the purchaser's bad faith in making the purchase did not defeat his rights in this respect.[8] Where distinctions between law and equity are observed, no notice can be taken of the purchaser's equity in an action of ejectment to recover the land,[9] but where the heir is required to go into equity to establish his title or possession, repayment will be enforced.[10] That the probate court may on vacating a sale adjust the rights of the purchaser has been both asserted[11] and denied.[12] Where the land has been recovered without repayment, an action will lie to recover back the purchase money from the estate.[13]

Plaintiff. As a general rule equity imposes an obligation on the heir seeking to set aside a sale to tender back the purchase money as a condition of obtaining relief, where it has been applied in payment of the liabilities of the estate.[14] It has been held, however, that a tender or offer to refund is not necessary where the sale is an absolute nullity,[15] where it does not appear that the purchase money has been paid or applied to the benefit of the estate,[16] where the rents and profits received by the purchaser exceed the amount of his disbursements,[17] or where it appears that the purchaser paid nothing out of his own funds.[18] It has also been held that in ejectment by remaindermen against a transferee of the purchaser at an invalid administrator's sale, it is not a condition precedent to recovery that plaintiffs offer to restore that part of the price received by them in ignorance of the source from which it was derived.[19]

[§ 1685] (3) Method and Extent of Reimbursement. The equity of the purchaser arises from the employment of the money for the benefit of the estate, and accordingly it is sometimes held that his right is one of subrogation to those of the creditors who have been paid out of the purchase money,[20] or to have his payment charged as a lien on the land;[21] but actual repayment to the extent at least of benefits received by the estate is the usual requirement,[22] and, according to a number of authorities, the entire purchase money should be money to the residuary legatee and have no assets in their hands, although there has been no judicial settlement, the action should be brought against the legatee. Mertens v. Roche, 39 App. Div. 398, 57 NYS 349. (2) As an unauthorized sale confers no right on the administrator to receive the money as administrator, he is not liable to the purchaser therefor in his representative capacity unless it be shown that he has actually accounted to the estate for such money. "There was tender due by plaintiff, is another proposition presented by the defense. The difficulty in requiring a preceding tender grows out of the fact that the amount sometimes is not known; the extent of benefit received is not established. In a number of cases it has been held that tender must be made. In a few cases it has been held that plaintiff does not have to make a tender, as it may be claimed by reconvention. The amount being known in this case, no such difficulty arises. The amount should be tendered. It is a matter of equity, and the purpose is to protect the purchaser in the matter of his claim if he loses his title." Hibernia Bank, etc., Co. v. Whitney, 122 La. 890, 896, 48 S 314.

[a] Insufficient plea.—In ejectment by a remainderman against a transferee of the purchaser at an invalid administrator's sale, an answer averring that "petitioners cannot retain said purchase money and recover said land, and they have at no time restored or offered to restore said purchase money, with interest," is insufficient as setting up an estoppel, and not good as a plea for an equitable accounting. [e] Land of infant heirs.—Where minor children, the owners of land which was the separate estate of their deceased mother, were not parties to a judgment directing that the land be sold in the administration of their father's estate, such heirs, being non sui juris, were not responsible for such unauthorized sale, even though the proceeds were applied to their benefit, and hence land belonging to such heirs other than that receiving the benefit could not be subjected to an equitable lien in favor of the purchaser for the price paid, on the sale being set aside. repaid.[23] So where the purchase money is sufficient to pay all the debts and leave a surplus for the heirs, it must be repaid in full,[24] and it is also held that the purchaser is entitled to repayment of money applied to the satisfaction of the debts of the heir or devisee who seeks to avoid the sale.[25] It has been held that interest should be allowed,[26] and the purchaser should be reimbursed for taxes paid by him,[27] and other reasonable and proper disbursements made in maintaining the property,[28] as well as auctioneer's fees[29] and costs of examining the title,[30] which he has paid, and that costs allowed to the executor should not be deducted from the amount to be repaid.[31]

[§ 1686] b. Reimbursement for Improvements.[32] A purchaser in good faith is entitled, when the sale is avoided, to credit or reimbursement for improvements made by him,[33] not at their cost or separate value, but to the extent to which they have enhanced the value of the property.[34] It is sometimes held that the value of improvements is allowed only as a set-off against rents and profits, and that the allowance cannot exceed the amount of such rents and profits.[35] Where an administrator purchased the land and made improvements thereon, which were paid out of the rents, it was held that he was not, on avoidance of the sale, entitled to anything on account of the improvements as against the heirs.[36] It has also been held that a court, setting aside a deed to an administratrix and guardian of infant heirs, purchasing land in a suit by her to settle the estate and sell the land after the allotment of dower to her, may not allow her the cost of improvements made on the part of the land assigned to her as dower.[37]

[§ 1687] c. Liability for Rents and Profits. The purchaser should be charged with the rents and profits of the land during the period of his possession.[38] But a court setting aside a deed to an administratrix and guardian of infant heirs, made

Tex.—Kalteyer v. Wipff, (Civ. A.) 49 SW 1055.
Va.—Hudgin v. Hudgin, 6 Gratt. (47 Va.) 320, 52 AmD 124.

[a] If an heir purchases at an invalid sale and collects rents, and the sale is afterward set aside at the suit of another heir who is adjudged entitled to a share of the rents so collected, the amount thus due the latter should be charged as a lien on the interest of the purchasing heir in the land. Kalteyer v. Wipff, (Tex. Civ. A.) 49 SW 1055.

[b] Liability of purchaser at foreclosure.—Where the purchaser at an administration sale executed a mortgage on the land prior to the institution of proceedings to set aside the sale, and after the commencement of such proceedings, to which the purchaser and his mortgagee were made parties, the land was sold under foreclosure of the mortgage, and the purchaser at foreclosure was in possession when the administration in a suit by her to settle the estate and sell the land after the allotment of dower to her, may not charge her with rent in favor of infant children occupying the land with her and deriving their support from the cultivation thereof, although she is not entitled to compensation for the support of the children.[39]

Direction for payment to heir. A purchaser cannot complain that he is directed to pay the rents and profits to the heir instead of the executor, where under the will it was the duty of the executor to pay them to the heir.[40]

If the purchaser has sold the premises and made a profit thereby, he will be required to account for the amount so made.[41]

[§ 1688] d. Liability of Purchaser Who Assumes Mortgage. A purchaser at an administrator's sale who assumes a mortgage does not incur any obligation to an heir who repudiates the sale on the ground that the property was decedent's homestead.[42]

[§ 1689] T. Operation and Effect of Sale[43]—1. Sale Judicial. A sale of land by an executor or administrator under order of court is in the nature of a judicial sale, and has in general the same force and effect as any other judicial sale.[44]

[§ 1690] 2. Divesting of Titles and Liens—a. Title of Heirs or Devisees. A sale by an executor or administrator to pay debts divests the title of the heirs or devisees,[45] even though there were irregularities in connection therewith,[46] but does not prevent them from setting up an after-acquired title.[47] Such a sale also divests the land of the lien of a legacy charged thereon.[48] The relation-sale was set aside, the heirs of the decedent were entitled to have the use of the land set off against the interest on the mortgage debt. Hatfield v. Richmond, 161 Ky. 352, 170 SW 951.

[b] If the decedent owned an undivided interest in land, and the administrator sold a specific part of it, the sale passes whatever interest the heirs had in the specific part sold. King v. Cabaniss, 81 Ga. 661, 7 SE 620.

[c] If one of several heirs purchases, the title so acquired does not inure to the benefit of the others, but vests exclusively in him. Aubuchon v. Aubuchon, 133 Mo. 260, 34 SW 569.

[d] Where devisees were parties to a suit in which the lands specifically devised were sold to pay debts, there was a presumption in favor of the propriety of selling the lands specifically devised, since the devisees were either guilty of negligence in failing to protect their own interests, or else it was necessary to sell such lands. Gwinner v. Michael, 103 Va. 268, 48 SE 895.

[i] Minor heirs are not bound (1) by a sale of realty belonging to the estate, at the instance of their tutrix acting as administratrix, unless the sale is made on the advice of a family meeting duly homologated pursuant to statute. Deshotels v. Lafleur, 134 La. 1052, 64 S 905. (2) The failure to record, as provided by statute, a will made by an heir of land does not relieve a purchaser of the land from taking notice of the interest of a minor devisee named therein, where the will has been duly probated in the county in which the land is situated, testator's title being such that a purchaser would be required to notice it. Horton v. Barto, 57 Wash. 477, 107 P 191, 135 AmSR 999.
